Murkowski announces new Rural Outreach Coordinator

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Senator Lisa Murkowski announced the addition of Deborah Vo to be her Rural Outreach Coordinator. In her new capacity, Vo will engage with rural Alaskans to assist them with the challenges facing them from a federal perspective and advise Senator Murkowski's policy team in Washington, DC.

"Rural Alaska has a unique set of possibilities and issues, and I welcome an experienced woman like Deborah to help contribute to my work for Alaskans," said Senator Murkowski. "Deborah has an impressive track record of advancing rural issues and being a strong advocate for the advancement of Alaska Native peoples; I am both excited and proud to have her on board to serve the state we love."

Born and raised in St. Mary's on the Lower Yukon, Deborah is the daughter of the late Fred Alstrom and Domitilla Alstrom. She began her career working for her tribe and the City of St. Mary's. She has over a decade of experience working for CDQ groups in the Lower Yukon and Kuskokwim, and statewide experience with Alaska Inter-Tribal Council and the Alaska Native Health Board. Alaska fiscal disaster deepens with wasteful GOP spending

Senate debates operating budget amidst teacher layoffs and new GOP spending proposals

GOP spending proposals
ANCHORAGE: In the midst of a fiscal disaster and teacher layoffs, Gov. Parnell and legislative Republicans are spending more on wasteful projects like the Knik Arm Crossing and big salary increases for Parnell's staff. These spending increases come amidst massive deficits that threaten the PFD, according to the non-partisan Legislative Finance Division. Gov. Parnell's staff have gotten massive salary increases that follow a $26,000 pay raise Gov. Parnell received earlier. Amidst the governor's wasteful spending, the Senate is debating whether or not to reverse cuts in classroom education funding.

"As the ship of state sinks, Gov. Parnell is buying new chaise lounges for the deck," said Mike Wenstrup, Chair of the Alaska Democratic Party.

Low-Lights of Parnell's Fiscal Disaster:

Massive Deficits:

- Gov. Parnell has overseen a transition from a $5 billion surplus to a $2 billion annual deficit.
- Even Republicans acknowledge that the PFD is at risk because of Parnell's deficits.

Education Cuts:

- The Anchorage School District is announcing hundreds of additional layoffs this year, representing 6 percent of teachers, and the Fairbanks and Juneau school districts also face teacher layoffs.
- The University of Alaska is on an "unsustainable path" because of state deficits.

Wasteful Spending:

- The top four staffers in Gov. Parnell's office are set to earn nearly $1 million annually, averaging almost a quarter million dollars per staffer annually (FY 2015 Gov. budget).
- Gov. Parnell's Chief of Staff's salary has grown by 79 percent since 2010, from $148,285 to $265,441 annually (FY 2015 Gov. budget).
- Gov. Parnell has had his own salary increased from $125,004 to $145,000 (FY 2013 actual).
- After an audit revealed that there will be insufficient traffic for the Knik Arm Crossing, Gov. Parnell proposes more money for a project that was ridiculed with a "Golden Fleece" award by Taxpayers for Common Sense.
- Rep. Mike Hawker entered into a controversial sole-source contract to increase Anchorage Legislative Information lease rates by 500 percent, putting taxpayers on the hook for some $33 million, and now is considering a sole-source purchase of the building from the same contractor.
- A new study finds that completing all of Parnell's megaprojects would cost $17.7 billion—more money than is in state savings—which would quadruple Alaska debt service costs.

When Gov. Parnell presented his budget before the 2013 legislative session, he claimed the state would have a $500 million surplus. During the 2013 session, Senate Bill 21 passed, and then the Governor estimated that Alaska faced a $667 million deficit in FY 14. That deficit projection grew to $2 billion in FY 2014 with the release of Parnell's budget this past December. The Legislative Finance Division's report projecting a long-term $2.5 billion annual deficit highlights how quickly Alaska's fiscal condition has deteriorated after passage of the Oil Giveaway. "In just a few short years, the bottom-line fiscal question facing Alaska legislators has changed from 'How much can we save this year' to 'How large is the deficit,'" said the Legislative Finance report.

nance report. The year before Sean Parnell became Governor, Alaska had a $5 billion surplus. The state continued to run surpluses for the duration of the oil tax regime known as "Alaska's Clear and Equitable Share," or ACES, and saved $17 billion in the state's Constitutional and Statutory Budgetary Reserves. Parnell lobbied for three years to repeal ACES, and succeeded after an unconstitutional gerrymandering provided him with a one vote margin in the state senate. Passage of Parnell's Oil Giveaway immediately put Alaska into deficit spending, and presaged the massive deficits the state faces now. As the Alaska Dispatch reported, "the state has said so long to billion-dollar surpluses and hello to billion-dollar deficits."

which creates the Alaska Tourism Marketing Board within the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development (DCCED).

House passes bill strengthening Alaska gun laws

The Alaska House of Representatives March 26 passed a bill by Majority Leader Lance Pruitt to strengthen the state's gun laws.

House Bill 366 was brought forward by the National Shooting Sports Foundation as part of their "FixNICS" initiative. Leader Pruitt agreed to carry the bill on their behalf. "It is good public policy," Pruitt, R-Anchorage, said. "As the law stands today, there's nothing in place. Federally licensed firearms dealers could unknowingly sell a weapon to a person who is disqualified by the courts from owning one. This initiative and this bill end that."

The bill allows the Alaska Dept. of Public Safety to receive identifying information from the Alaska Court System regarding individuals who are prohibited from firearm ownership due to an adjudication of mental illness or mental incompetence, and a resulting involuntary commitment for more than 30 days. The DPS would then transmit the limited identifying information to the Federal Bureau of Investigations for inclusion into the National Instant Criminal Background Check System, or NICS.

The NICS is made up of available records from all participating states, where licensees and law enforcement can check to see if an individual wanting to purchase a firearm is disqualified from doing so. This bill also includes an important provision so that a person may apply to have their name removed from the database if a judge determines that they have fully recovered and are no longer a danger to themselves or society. This relief from disability was not previously available to Alaskans, and allows us to be in alignment with the NICS Improvement Act of 2007, which established the critical component allowing removal of a person's name from NICS.

Diabetes mellitus: How to detect the silent killer

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Look around you and randomly pick two other adults. Statistically speaking, one of the three of you has either diabetes or pre-diabetes.

According to the most recent fact sheet from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention 11.3 percent of U.S. adults have type 2 diabetes and 35 percent of all U.S. adults over age 20 have pre-diabetes.

The percentage increases with age so that 26.9 percent of people in the U.S. over age 65 have type 2 diabetes and 50 percent of people over age 65 have pre-diabetes

These statistics are frightening because diabetes is preventable, yet it remains a major cause of death from heart attacks, strokes, and kidney disease in the United States. Diabetes is also the number one cause of blindness, non-traumatic amputations, and kidney failure. Furthermore, people with diabetes are more prone to cancer, especially colon cancer.

Some people develop a dangerous sense of complacency when their blood sugar is only slightly elevated. I have heard many people say, "The doctor said I just had pre-diabetes," or, "I just have borderline diabetes." But pre-diabetes or borderline diabetes is actually Type 2 diabetes in its earliest and most treatable form.

Type 2 diabetes, also called noninsulin dependent diabetes mellitus, is a silent killer. It often festers for years unnoticed, gradually doing damage to the entire body long before symptoms develop.

In fact, on the day a person is diagnosed with type 2 diabetes, it is estimated that he or she has already lost half of the insulin-producing cells in his or her pancreas. Even worse, the risk of heart attacks and strokes doubles when a person develops diabetes. Studies show that a person diagnosed with diabetes has the same risk of having a heart attack as a non-diabetic person who has already had a heart attack.

The good news is that diabetes or pre-diabetes can now be detected in the earliest stages by using one of several simple tests:

Fasting glucose check. Checking a fasting blood sugar (glucose) at least eight hours after a meal is the easiest and least expensive test. A healthy fasting glucose is 65-99 mg/dL. Pre-diabetes is defined by a glucose of 100-124 mg/dL and type 2 diabetes is defined by a glucose of 125 mg/dL or higher.

Hemoglobin A1c (A1c) test: Checking the A1c level allows the doctor to estimate the average blood sugar over a three month period. A normal A1c falls between 4 percent and 5.7 percent. Pre-diabetes is defined as an A1c of 5.7-6.4 percent, and Type 2 diabetes is defined by an

ALASKA

A1c of 6.5 percent or higher. Glucose Tolerance Test: Some doctors also order a glucose tolerance test which looks for an unusual rise in glucose above 200 mg/dL two hours after ingesting a specially prepared sugary drink.

Once diagnosed, the progression of type 2 dia-DOCTOR betes and prediabetes can be stopped, even versed, by taking a few basic steps.

The national diabetes prevention program, the results of which were originally published in the New England Journal of Medicine (NEJM) in 2002, has shown that overweight people with pre-diabetes who lose 7 percent of their body weight and who exercise for 30 minutes each day cut their risk of developing diabetes in half.

Even people who are diagnosed with diabetes find that exercise and maintaining a healthy body weight allows them to reduce the amount of medication needed for controlling their blood sugar.

Diet can also have a profound impact on whether or not a person develops diabetes. A diabetes prevention diet is high in fiber, rich in vegetables, beans, and healthy seafood like salmon, and low in saturated fats. In reality, the diabetes prevention diet is the diet we should all be eating

Keep Nome's history in Alaska Dear Mr. Ferreiro:

We strongly urge you to reconsider the closure of the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) facility in Anchorage. The cost savings used to justify the closure are a pittance compared to the loss that Alaskans will experience if Nome's federal records are shipped to Seattle. Alaska is a relatively young state. This means that the bulk of the records pertaining to the history of Alaska are federal. Shipping these records to Seattle is a serious loss to our cultural heritage. Already, so many of the documents and objects that are critical to the history of Alaska are housed outside of the state. NARA's Anchorage facility was created to reverse this trend and to ensure that Alaskans had easy access to the documents that impact our lives.

These records are important to individuals far removed from the history profession. Closing the NARA facility is detrimental to Alaskans from all walks of life. Native peoples, fishermen, scientists, engineers, lawyers, real estate agents and others consult these records because federal agencies have enormous sway over the daily lives of Alaskans. Federal entities own most of Alaska's land and serve as some of the largest employers in the state. Researching at Anchorage's NARA facility is more than an academic pursuit: NMFS fishing regulations impact fish stocks as much as fishing families; changes in BLM management paradigms subsistence use; BIA health policies and civil rights stances directly shape the futures of Alaska's Native villages. Federal policies are felt in Alaska homes in a way that is unmatched in other states. The records that chart these decisions must be kept in Alaska for reasons of transparency and for the empowerment of communities. Alaskans must be able to easily access the records housed at NARA's Anchorage facility to understand not only the development of our state, but to keep federal agencies accountable to it.

Here is just one small piece relating to the historical record of Nome from Record Group 26, US Coast Guard files on the Nome Lifesaving Station. Additionally, Record Group 36, U.S. Customs Service also has many Nome documents of entries and clearances of ships, to say nothing of the District Court Record Group 21. Much of Nome's earliest history was documented by federal agencies and these records are in the Anchorage NARA archives. Please keep Nome's history in Alaska!

We urge you to consider NARA's mission to "ensure continuing access to the essential documentation of the rights of American citizens and the actions of their government. We support democracy, promote civic education, and facilitate historical understanding of our national experience." Allow us Alaskans to access and interpret our own history, in our own state. Allow us to use the important documents held within Anchorage's NARA facility to advocate for our rights and improve the transparency of federal actions in Alaska. Please reverse your decision to close Anchorage's NARA facility, as it is detrimental to democracy, transparency, and civic discourse.

Sincerely,

Alaska Historical Society Board of Directors

P.S. As of today, Over 900 Alaskans have signed a petition to keep Alaska's history in Alaska. To find out why we oppose this illconceived idea, visit: http://www.alaskahistoricalsociety.org/index.cfm/about-ahs/Advo-

Saying It Sincerely

Pastor Wendell Downs Seventh-day Adventist Church, A member of the Nome Ministerial Association

Homosexuality /lesbianism – it's a politically hot social and legal debate. Some communities and states have held out for traditional values, yet one by one the geographical areas which once seemed to be the social continents of traditional marriage now seem to be rapidly shrinking to mere islands at the most, as this nation wrestles with its definition of marriage. Even churches are wrestling with the changes in societal views, my church as well.

Recently a Native member of my church from an undisclosed village brought up the topic as I was visiting in the home, the television loudly discussing the same subject in the background. The member observed, "This has never been a traditional question among my people.'

I don't believe that I have the wisdom to resolve the tensions raised by society. At the same time, I am deeply worried for the future of the family, the basic unit of society.

Here are a couple of personal observations and opinions that I have formed over quite a number of years

1. Every person that I have ever met was born to a mother and a father, not to say that both or either remained around for the duration of his or her childhood. This phenomenon is generally observable world wide, something we may label "a fact of life". Children originate in a male-female relationship. Yet this primary relationship is being challenged by the new social views. In my view, we should always protect this primary relationship.

2. Grandparents (and great-grandparents, if they are still living) have perhaps the best understanding of marriage and interpersonal relationships, certainly more mature than are many of those which have recently formed and have not stood the test of time. True, our elders may have a difficult time adjusting to I-Pads and I-Phones, but they have seen what lasts and what doesn't last. Have we ever honored our elders by asking their opinions of these "new views" of marriage? Their answers would be worth noting, in my opinion.

That having been said, it says nothing about how I should treat people who may differ in viewpoint from me. I may differ, but on my part let it be kindly. In the Biblical view society at large, "the world", is lost and headed for selfdestruction and eventual extinction. Only the direct intervention of God in the past has changed that course, through men such as Noah, Abraham, David, and Jesus. From the Christian predictive viewpoint, only God's direct intervention in the future (Jesus' Second Coming) will ultimately keep humanity from self-destructing.

Yes, when Jesus was here, He treated people with kindness and respect, even those with whom He differed. When He pronounced woes, He did so with tears in his voice. If I must do the same, I should take a lesson from Him. Isn't that really what it means to be "Christian"?

In my view, even if society at large no longer agrees that we should define marriage as existing only between a man and a woman, the primary purpose of the church, if no longer the society at large, should focus around the ultimate salvation of humanity, not always possible as a society or even as whole families, but at least as individuals. "For God so loved the world (humanity) that he gave his only begotten son (Jesus), that whoever (anyone, singular) believes in him should not perish but have everlasting life." Jn. 3:16

When a person is confronted with the need to stand up for his or her Biblically-based value system, those values may not always appear harmonious with what is currently politically in vogue, but his or her motives should clearly be observable through kind actions which will tend to "turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to their fathers..."(Malachi 4:6) rather than deliberately driving wedges between peo-

• Big line vs. Small line. In general I support a larger line than the smaller "bullet line" that was passed last session. The reason I do is that a larger line will create a revenue stream to the state treasury and in turn benefit the whole state while the smaller bullet line is just an energy project that will bring gas to the hot water heaters and stove tops of the Railbelt and provide no benefit to

· The second reason is, working with other rural legislators we were able to insert into the bill a Rural Energy Fund. The purpose of the fund is to provide a source of funding to develop infrastructure to deliver energy to areas of the state that will not have direct access to a North Slope natural gas pipeline.

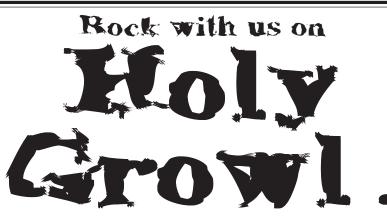

Education

The governor, in his state-of-the-state address, declared this to be the Education Session, and I can report to you that it does look like there will be an education package approved by the legislature. We don't know yet what the complete package will look like but I'm sensing that there will be a BSA increase. Also, I will be trying to insert a program into the education package that will increase broadband delivery (internet services) for all school districts in the state. This is especially important for rural students, as it will increase the educational opportunities available to them in their home villages through distance learning.

Republicans rush to defend Kelly's anti-contraception comments

Senator Giessel "reveres" and "applauds" Kelly's comments ad pregnancy-tests-in-bars proposal

ANCHORAGE: Republicans are rushing to defend Senator Kelly's (R-Fairbanks) controversial comments pushing pregnancy tests in bars just one day after Kelly stood by his comments in a lengthy Senate floor speech. Not a single Republican has condemned Kelly's or Senator Dyson's anti-woman comments.

"I do applaud Pete Kelly with what he's proposing with FASD. We all recognize what a significant problem that is, but no one's been brave enough to tackle it before he, so with that I applaud him and revere him,' said GOP Senator Giessel in a press availability, in reference to Kelly's pregnancy-tests-in-bars proposal.

"It seems like every day Republican politicians open a new front in the War on Women," said Kay Brown, Executive Director of the Alaska Democratic Party.

Kelly doubled down on his opposition to contraception, claiming it "may not work" for women who binge drink. On Friday, Kelly said "Birth control is for people who don't want to act responsibly." Senator Kelly's comments came just two weeks after his GOP colleague Fred

Dyson inaugurated what was labeled "the new Alaska war on women" by encouraging women to stop drinking lattes if they can't afford birth control, and suggested that women can airlift birth control to Alaska

Senator Meyer's 'Spice' Bill passes Senate

Senate Bill 173 makes misleading packaging illegal and establishes fines of $500 per package

The Alaska State Senate passed Senate Bill 173, sponsored by Senator Kevin Meyer (R-Anchorage), which aims to stop the sale of illicit synthetic drugs by banning misleading statements on packaging. Currently, the synthetic drugs, which are commonly used as alternatives to marijuana and cocaine, are being sold legally in stores statewide as potpourri, bath salts, plant food, and even iPod cleaner.

"The real truth here is 'Spice' is not nice," said Senator Meyer. "Kids and parents see it sold legally in stores, and they think it is OK, but it's not. 'Spice' is very dangerous and responsible for hundreds of deaths every year in the United States. It is my hope this new approach for keeping it off store shelves will make a big impact."

If passed by the Legislature, the new law would require 'Spice' packaging to include labels which specifically say what is contained in the packets, the intended use, and the name of the manufacturer. The packaging cannot be "false or misleading" and must carry accurate directions for use. The penalty for possession is $500 per packet.

"This is a rabbit I have been chasing for many years. Despite our best efforts to outlaw the most common chemicals, manufacturers changed the compounds slightly to make them legal," said Senator Meyer. "That's why we needed to take a new approach and focus on stopping the sale of these dangerous drugs based on their misleading packaging."

The idea for Senate Bill 173 comes from an ordinance passed by the Anchorage Assembly earlier this

"The effects of these drugs are so incredibly dangerous- this law needs to be in effect statewide. A lot of kids think Spice and other synthetic drugs are a cheap way to get a buzz or a high, and even worse, they think it is safe because it is legally sold," said Senator Meyer.

NSHC/Kawerak joint boards discuss regional concerns

By Diana Haecker

Last week, the joint boards of Kawerak Inc. and Norton Sound Health Corporation held a two-day meeting at the Mini Convention Center in Nome to update board members on pressing matters concerning the Bering Strait and Norton Sound region and on the corporations' efforts to promote health and wellness.

NSHC

CEO of the Norton Sound Health Corporation Angie Gorn reported that NSHC has 522 full-time or parttime employees, with 44 current vacancies.

In order to train a local workforce, NSHC is looking into establishing an apprenticeship program. Positions that would qualify for such a program include jobs in billing/coding, certified nurse assistants, maintenance, cooks, laboratory assistants and licensed practical nurses.

Gorn reported that last month NSHC transitioned to electronic health records. In order to make integration with other health care providers such as Alaska Native Medical Center easier, NSHC chose Cerner software to be compatible with ANMC.

"Your health care visits will now be integrated so that from village to Nome to Anchorage, your providers can access your health care information," said Gorn. The software alerts providers when it's time for preventative visits or follow-up visits. Asked if the information is kept safe from identity theft, Chris Bolton, NSHC Chief Operating Officer answered that the data has to be encrypted before it's being sent. "It is protected by federal laws and standards," Bolton said. "Breeches are possible but we keep it as safe as possible."

Gorn updated the boards on an ongoing concern among Saint Lawrence Island residents about high cancer rates. After the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry contacted the Alaska Cancer Registry, the registry initiated a cancer study in Saint Lawrence Is-

Council cool to limit drivers' cell phone use

By Sandra L. Medearis

People who care about danger coming down the street on four wheels are noticing the pauses, the erratic steering, the telltale glow lighting the faces of drivers texting while operating their vehicles with cell phones in hand.

Derrick Leedy is one of them. Nome Police Chief John Papasodora agreed with Leedy.

But Nome Common Council members did not push for the measure. Or maybe that panel wanted public input before they draft a law against using mobile phones in the driver's seat.

"Sooner or later serious injury or death will happen because of a driver's cell phone and texting use," Leedy told the Council during public comment March 24. "Distracted driving is a huge issue in "accidents" that are 100 percent preventable."

Leedy asked the Council to discuss the cell phone issue and ask Panasodora to bring his suggestions to the next council meeting.

State law forbids text messaging during driving, according to Papasodora.

"The state statute says you can't view any screen device while driving," he said.

He favors a local law curtailing hands-on phone use.

"We haven't had any incidents purely related to cell phone use," Papasodora said. "It would be a proactive move to send a definite safety message to the community."

Councilman Stan Andersen, presiding over the Council meeting in Mayor Denise Michels' absence, put the quash on having a law researched and drafted.

"I'm not in favor," he said. "We have enough laws out there telling us what to do already."

Nobody around the Council table disagreed with him.

Deep-draft Arctic Port study release delayed to end of year

By Diana Haecker

The Army Corps of Engineers last week announced yet another delay to present a draft of the Alaska Deep Draft Arctic Ports Study.

Lorraine Cordova, the project's Economics Team Leader with the Army Corps of Engineers, said in an email that the Corps anticipates the release of the draft report by the end of this year.

The Alaska Dept. of Transportation and Public Facilities and the Army Corps of Engineers are cosponsoring the three-year Alaska Deep Draft Arctic Ports Study to evaluate potential deepwater port locations.

Nome and Port Clarence rose to the top of a short list for potential port development. A draft of the study was supposed to be released in December, then it was postponed for this spring and now the Corps announced yet another delay in presenting a draft.

"The delayed release is due to additional scrutiny of the evaluation," wrote Cordova in an email to The Nome Nugget.

"We are currently gathering detailed information on vessels calling in the area — length, draft (loaded and unloaded), beam—, commodities moved with lots of historical information, and more detail on the future conditions. We are working with the Corps' Deep-Draft Navigation Planning Center of Expertise to complete the evaluation with additional detail. This is the primary reason for the added time to get to a draft report."

The study was spurred by increased vessel traffic in the Arctic and through the Bering Strait, which gave reason for concern for the State of Alaska and federal agencies. Since there is no deep draft port north of Dutch Harbor, the state and the Army Corps teamed up to look for a potential site to develop an Alaskan Arctic port which would serve as a infrastructure asset and the northernmost port for the US Coast Guard, the US Navy and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration in protecting and

Dear Editor:

There are well-intentioned people in Nome who have been supporting the idea that the school can drastically lower the student dropout rate and improve low student achievement by changing the programs, teachers and administrators. This agenda has had its negative effects. Over the last five years, Nome has experienced an unprecedented turnover of school staff. I believe this pressure on the school is misguided and unfruitful, and it is hurting the students. And, I have not seen the evidence that this approach has raised student achievement or lowered the student dropout rate in Nome. Frequent administrator turnover hurts program development. Inconsistent program development frustrates teachers. The quality of education for the children gets lost in the constant turmoil.

Students dropping out and low student achievement are already being tackled and wrestled with in school each day. Most educators chose education as a career because they have deep compassion for children. School employees have the same desire as our community.... seeing all the students succeed. They are on the community's side.

An additional place to apply effort and funding to solve these two problems is in our community's homes. Children who do well have many of the following advantages. Their home is for the most part stable, peaceful, harmonious, and free of chaos. They have role models who expect good grades, are supportive of school rules, and are respectful of school staff. These same children often have parents or guardians who ask how the school day went, and request to see their schoolwork, offer praise, and if pos-

Revenue Projections Confirm Oil Production Decline from SB 21

Oil Giveaway contributes to 38 percent reduction in revenue by FY 2015

The Department of Revenue has released its spring revenue projections, and beneath the rosy cover letter is a bleak picture of declining oil production and sharply declining revenue. The Parnell Administration projects a 38% oil revenue decline and a decline in Permanent Fund income of nearly $150 million by FY 2015. In addition, the administration continues to predict sharp declines in production, from over 536,000 barrels per day to approximately 321,000 ten years from now.

"This report confirms what Alaskans feared: Not only is the Oil Giveaway wreaking havoc by creating budget deficits, but it also is perpetuating our decline in oil production," said Vic Fischer. "Only by voting "Yes" on Proposition One can we begin to clean up the fiscal mess caused by the Giveaway and negotiate a better deal."

The content of the Department of Revenue report is inconsistent with the report's cover letter, which contains glowing praise for the Oil Giveaway. The contents of the report belie the administration's attempt to hide the real impact of the Oil Giveaway.

Chenault bill would legalize outside appointments to Alaska board 'Hijacks" domestic violence bill in attempt to appoint Outsiders

ANCHORAGE: House Speaker Mike Chenault is introducing legislation to legalize Gov. Parnell's appointment of a Texan to the Alaska Gasline Development Corporation while insulting qualified Alaskans. Chenault is attempting to "hijack" a domestic violence bill to legalize the Outsider appointment. The previous Outsider Parnell tried to appoint to an Alaska board withdrew his name from consideration following public outcry that his appointment violated state law, which requires appointing Alaskans.

"You know, it's not for every board," says Chenault. "You look at the cosmetology board or you're looking at the hairdressers board, those folks should be from Alaska. They're dealing with Alaskan issues. But whenever you're dealing with the possibility of a multi-billion-dollar project, we want to make sure we've got the best.'

·Parnell attempted to appoint Dennis Mandell, a Californian, to the State Assessment Review Board that determines value of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline. Mandell withdrew his name from consideration after public outcry in opposition to his appointment.

·Parnell's staff hired Paul Pozonsky, a Pennsylvanian, to be a Workforce Compensation Hearing Officer, in violation of Alaska Hire requirements. #### Committee Moves Food Security Legislation

Local preference would improve health, support local farms and businesses

The House Community and Regional Affairs Committee passed House Bill 238 from Representative Geran Tarr (D-Anchorage) to increase the amount of food Alaska agencies buy from local sources.

"With just five percent of our food grown in state, we must do more to address food security by supporting those who grow and produce food here in Alaska," said Tarr. "I've been working with Alaskan farmers for over a decade, and this measure can provide economic development opportunities for Alaskan businesses. I appreciate the committee's detailed consideration of the legislation, and I look forward to continuing the process to make it law."

The measure (HB238) allows state agencies more flexibility to purchase Alaska grown, even if the cost is slightly more. The bill addresses the Alaska preference statute, commonly referred to as the seven percent Statute, which requires state agencies buy Alaska grown if the price is within seven percent of the price of other items. This bill increases that to 12 percent. Strengthening the use of the seven percent statute is a priority of the Alaska Food Policy Council.

The bill now moves to the House Finance Committee for consideration.

April Fools

Putin's threatening to gobble up the Crimea and throw Russia back a hundred years, and some idiot wants to give Alaska back to Russia. Next thing we'll have France wanting to take back the Louisiana Purchase and England wanting to collect taxes for speaking English. Let's not hold our breath for the return to sanity. There were a lot of lunatics in world history. We have legislators who want college students to tote guns to class. We have a governor who wants to build a big hydroelectric dam on a fault line. We have legislators who don't read their proposed legislation. They try to appoint members to state boards who do not live in Alaska- as if we are unqualified to handle our own destiny.

Sadly we have too many legislative carpenter ants in the state and federal legislatures who are trying to destroy Affordable Health Care, Medicaid, and laws that help ordinary citizens. Unfortunately these politicians do not restrict their shenanigans to April 1. Apparently they assume the public is either too apathetic to read and apply critical thinking or that folks approve of their antics. Maybe they are right. We are subjected to a barrage of political ads that are so idiotic and outrageous that it makes us wonder how gullible the big boys think we are. "FACT! FACT! LIES! LIES," they shout, "Tell Senator..." they scream, and "Tell 'em yourself" we mutter as we speed read the paid for by some patriotic sounding made up group of billionaires and corporations who hide in anonymity and have baked themselves into an apple pie and twisted themselves into an American flag. They serve us a thin slice and expect us to salute.

These self-serving politicians and billionaires should be ashamed of themselves. But they have no soul and no shame and the truth is oh so limiting. Folks in rural Alaska are rather forgiving, but we are not as easily fooled as those Valley folks. We have a lot of saltshakers for all the grains of salt they want us to swallow. - N.L.M.-

Rio Tinto withdraws from Pebble Partnership

London-based mining giant Rio Tinto announced on Monday that it will gift its 19.1 percent shareholding in Northern Dynasty Minerals Ltd., owner of the Pebble Project, to two local Alaskan charitable foundations, namely the Alaska Community Foundation to fund educational and vocational training and the Bristol Bay Native Corporation Education Foundation. This puts the Bristol Bay Native Corporation in an awkward position, as it becomes a shareholder in a project that BBNC

Rio Tinto's decision follows the strategic review of Rio Tinto's interest in Northern Dynasty, which concluded the Pebble Project does not fit with Rio Tinto's strategy, said a press release.

"Rio Tinto has long and historic ties to Alaska and we continue to see Alaska as an attractive location for potential future investment," Rio Tinto Copper chief executive Jean-Sebastien Jacques said. "By giving our shares to two respected Alaskan charities, we are ensuring that Alaskans will have a say in Pebble's future development and that any economic benefit supports Alaska's ability to attract investment that creates BBNC President and CEO Jason Metrokin said that Rio Tinto deserves credit for its willingness to reconsider its position in the Pebble Project. "This gift provides an example of what open discussion and relationship building between stakeholders with differing views can accomplish. However, BBNC's opposition to the proposed Pebble mine has not changed," he said.

Rio Tinto is the second miner to back out of the project after Anglo American announced in September that it would withdraw from the project by handing its 50 percent stake in the project back to Northern Dynasty and taking a $300 million write down in the process. Rio Tinto took a $130 million write down on the asset in its 2013 results.

Rep. Nageak to replace Rep. Neuman on commission

House Speaker Mike Chenault, R-

Nikiski, has appointed Representative Benjamin Nageak, D-Barrow, to replace Rep. Mark Neuman, R-Su-Valley, on the Alaska Arctic Policy Commission. Senator Lesil McGuire and Rep. Bob Herron co-chair the commission. "As a legislator who represents an Arctic region, Representative Nageak is already familiar with many of the issues the Commission is working on," Herron said. "The Commission appreciates Rep. Neuman's participation over the past year and in particular his contributions to the wildlife section of the Preliminary Report. We welcome Representative Nageak to the AAPC."

Rep. Nageak was an enthusiastic participant when the AAPC met in his home town of Barrow on June 12-13. "I'm very excited to be appointed to the Commission, whose work is so important to the region I represent and all of Alaska," Nageak said. "I've been following the Commission's work with great interest, and am really looking forward to serving.'

Bennie Nageak is a lifelong Alaskan who was born in Kaktovik. He is currently serving his first term as an Alaska State Representative for the Arctic region, House District 40. Nageak served in the U.S. Army from 1970-1972 and returned home to begin a long career in public service. In his own region he worked for the North Slope Borough in the Assessing Department, and as Director of the Department of Wildlife Management. He served as North Slope Borough Assemblyman (1995-1996) and then Mayor (1996-1999).

The AAPC's preliminary report is available for public comment at www.akarctic.com. The commission will meet next in Anchorage on May 6-7, 2014.

NOAA Fisheries concludes 'no jeopardy' to Steller sea lionš

Proposed changes to fishing restrictions in the Aleutian Islands are not likely to jeopardize the continued existence of the endangered western population of Steller sea lions or adversely modify Steller sea lion critical habitat, according to a biological opinion issued last week by NOAA Fisheries under the Endangered Species Act.

The agency estimates that the proposed fishery management changes would relieve roughly two-thirds of the economic burden imposed on Aleutian Islands' fishermen by sea lion protection measures that took effect in 2011. Fishermen could see new regulations in place by January

"Finding a way to protect endangered sea lions while minimizing costs to the fishing industry is a real challenge," said Jim Balsiger, NOAA Fisheries Alaska regional administrator. "I applaud the North Pacific Fishery Management Council and stakeholders for recommending a new suite of measures that effectively balances those two objec-

The agency's last biological opinion on the effects of fisheries, issued in 2010, found that the ongoing groundfish fisheries in the western and central Aleutian Islands were likely to jeopardize the continued existence of Steller sea lions and adversely modify their critical habitat. This led NOAA Fisheries to develop a "Reasonable and Prudent Alternative" under the ESA, which closed the Atka mackerel and Pacific cod fisheries in the western Aleutians in 2011, and further restricted these fisheries in the central Aleutians. The 2010 opinion underwent two external reviews—one commissioned by NOAA and undertaken by the Center for Independent Experts, and a second provided by the states of Alaska and Washington. NOAA Fisheries conducted several new analyses in response to the reviews, which are incorporated into the new 2014 opinion.

The new biological opinion was developed based on the best available scientific information and notes that considerable changes have occurred in the Aleutian Islands fisheries, coupled with new data and analyses that help give the agency a better picture of the potential for commercial fisheries to compete with sea lions for Pacific cod, Atka mackerel and pollock. Beginning in 2014, NOAA and the North Pacific Fishery Management Council split the total allowable catch for Pacific cod between the Bering Sea fishing grounds and the Aleutian Islands, resulting in far less allowable Pacific cod harvest in the Aleutians. Additional changes that are being considered would limit the amount, timing and location of Atka mackerel, Pacific cod and pollock harvests inside Steller sea lion critical habitat in the

Bill passes to advance development in Arctic

Last week, the Alaska State Senate passed Senate Bill 140, sponsored by Senator Lesil McGuire (R-Anchorage), which is designed to boost infrastructure development in the Arctic. As Co-Chairs of the Alaska Arctic Policy Commission, Senator McGuire and Representative Bob Herron (D-Bethel) developed the idea behind SB140 during the commission's multiple meetings around the state over the past year.

"This bill is the culmination of hundreds of hours of work by the members of the Alaska Arctic Policy Commission," said Senator McGuire. "As we traveled the state to listen to the people in the communities, the one recurring theme was the need for Arctic infrastructure. This bill sends the message to the Federal Government that we feel fortifying and strengthening our assets in the Arctic is critical and we are not afraid to lead this massive undertaking." SB 140 creates incentives to attract private investment to build ports, roads, emergency response systems and telecommunications projects in the vast expanse of the Alaskan Arctic and its many communities by authorizing the Alaska Industrial Development and Export Authority to offer several financing options aimed at building public-private partnerships for the development of infrastructure in the Arctic.

The financing mechanisms in the bill are modeled after the Sustainable Energy Transmission and Supply Development Fund. The SETS fund is currently leading to the first commercialization of Alaska's North Slope natural gas while bringing energy relief to Interior Alaska in the form of LNG trucking to Fairbanks.

"This bill gives AIDEA the tools it needs to reach out to the people

Planners seek public's two cents on zoning enforcement

City planners have opened a 60day comment period on the "Z" word-zoning enforcement. To make collection of ideas easier, the Nome Planning Commission has put zoning code enforcement survey online and made hard copies available at Nome City Hall.

People who live within city limits and outside of the boundaries are encouraged to complete the survey, according to commissioners. They have spent hours at work sessions tweaking it to pull out valuable information on the public's priorities and appropriate consequences for violations. Additionally, they hope to use the information to create a manual to educate the public about the

The stated purpose of the Nome Zoning Code is to create a vital, cohesive, well-designed community in order to enhance Nome's character and to advance citizens' goals as identified in the Nome Comprehen-

The survey asks questions on zoning violations like additions or alterations on properties without proper building permits, addressing junkleftover construction materials, derelict appliances, garbage, nonfunctional vehicles, unsafe or abandoned derelict structures, mining

Other questions deal with noisy and disruptive activities near residences, need for sidewalks or widen-rights-of-ways and setbacks are wide enough.

Eileen Bechtol, city planner, and Commissioner Sara Lizak prepared the draft survey for Nome Planning Commission's review and comment.

In other business, the planning panel combed over a preliminary plat submitted by Norton Sound Health Corp. concerning land along Greg Kruschek Avenue west of the new hospital. Along with the plat came an application for the City of Nome to vacate right-of-way within the subject blocks.

NSHC plans to construct additional facilities on the land — assisted living housing and a wellness and training center. The right-of-ways in streets running from Sixth Avenue to Greg Kruschek Avenue.

Planners approved vacating the right-of-way and passed it on to Nome Common Council with a recommendation that the City vacate its rights-of-way subject to conditions that included NSHC accepting responsibility for the existing drainage or grant a utility easement to the City; NSHC construct and maintain a pedestrian easement from Sixth Avenue to Greg Kruschek Avenue;

Planners have again sent Nikolai Ivanoff back to the drawing board to provide more details on his Sons Subdivision, but have approved the preliminary plat with conditions to

At issue is Ivanoff's request to dedicate Musk Oxen Way to the City of Nome for maintenance. Ivanoff is providing a lot in the subdivision as a snow dump.

Before he got the green light, commissioners said, they want more detail on the subdivision map, including culverts, power lines and rights-of-way specifics.

The lot for snow dump at four acres is too big, according to John Blees, acting city engineer. Ivanoff must reduce the size. Blees has visited the site with Nome Public Works Dept. personnel and found the road constructed to City of Nome secondary road standards.

"What we have in front of us, we can't approve," Charlie Weiss, chairman, said.

The subdivision lies along Dexter Bypass Road north of Icyview.

The Dept. of Transportation and Public Facilities has agreed to turn over Greg Kruschek Avenue to the City of Nome. New signs along the bypass road north of the city suggest a speed of 25 miles per hour and caution for pedestrian safety.

Members of the Nome Planning Commission, in addition to Weiss and Lizak, are Robert Cahoon, Ken Hughes, Nikolai Ivanoff, John Odden and Larry Pederson.

who are looking to invest in the North. Right now, there is an estimated $100 billion of private capital that is looking for investment opportunities in the Arctic," said Senator McGuire. "Alaska is what makes the U.S. an Arctic Nation. This bill helps establish Alaska, and by extension the U.S., as a leader in the Arctic and positions us to capitalize on the massive new opportunities and challenges coming our way such as shipping, tourism, safety, and responsible resource development."

SB140 now heads to the House for further consideration.

Coast Guard report criticizes Shell

The Hill reports that poor judgment and an effort to avoid millions in taxes caused Royal Dutch Shell's Arctic rig to run aground in 2012, according to a new U.S. Coast Guard report. The report states that Shell showed "poor assessment and management of risks" associated with towing a heavy-duty drilling rig across Alaskan waters during winter.

The single most significant factor contributing to the grounding of the Kulluk oil drilling rig, the report said, was the decision to move the vessel "during the winter in the unique and challenging operating environment of Alaska." The report also includes dramatic descriptions of U.S. Coast Guard rescue attempts during a storm that caused the rig to pitch up to 50 feet, and details multiple and compounding errors in judgment and execution by Shell and its contrac-

The report, released last Thursday, states Shell rushed to move its rig to avoid state taxes in Alaska, which further led to complications. When the rig lost control a containment dome used to cap spills suffered damage, which prompted the Interior Department to review Shell's operations. "We appreciate the U.S. Coast Guard's thorough investigation into the Kulluk towing incident and will take the findings seriously," Shell said in a statement.

"Despite the severe weather anticipated along the route, tow planners did not recognize the overall risks involved prior to commencement of the tow. As such, no formalized risk assessment was conducted and no additional scrutiny was paid to previous towing operations of the Kulluk," the Coast Guard reported, "The lack of written policies for tow planning and execution contributed to this event."

In a January 2014 memorandum commenting on the report draft, Coast Guard Rear Admiral Thomas Ostebo said, "I feel that an inadequate determination of risk occurred, demonstrating a lack of respect for the unique risks inherent in Alaskan operations."

U.S. Senator Mark Begich said in a statement that he appreciates the Coast Guard's detailed investigation into the Kulluk incident and their solid recommendations for better training and stricter policies and procedures for vessels operating under Arctic conditions. "I remain a strong supporter of responsible development of the Arctic's resources. Moving forward, it will be of the utmost importance that the strictest standards are adhered to under challenging conditions. The Coast Guard's investigation and recommendations here will help guide that development and gives me greater confidence about the role the Arctic will play in Alaska's future," Begich said.

BSEE calls for oil spill research

The Maritime Executive reports that the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement is investing up to $600,000 for targeted oil spill response research in drift ice conditions. In an announcement released on the federal government's business opportunities website last week, the bureau called for white papers on new mechanical technologies for cleaning up oil spills in drift ice conditions that could be found in an Arctic environment. BSEE will select up to three designs for prototype development and testing at Ohmsett, the bureau's National Oil Spill Research and Renewable Energy Test Facility. This is the third announcement from BSEE for oil spill response research proposals within the last year. BSEE is the principal federal agency funding offshore oil spill response research. The bureau supports a research program that includes operation of Ohmsett, where many of today's commercially available oil spill cleanup products have been

The U.S. Coast Guard and the U.S. Navy as well as private industry and oil spill response organizations from around the world train their emergency response personnel with real oil and their own equipment at BSEE's Ohmsett facility in Leonardo, N.J.

Disputed HB 77 dies in Senate

By Diana Haecker

A bill that was introduced by Governor Sean Parnell and designed to streamline the Dept. of Natural Resources' process for issuing land and water use permits died in the Senate Resources Committee last week.

Senator Cathy Giessel (R-Anchorage Hillside/Turnagain Arm/N. Kenai), chair of the Senate Resources Committee, decided to hold House Bill 77 in committee indefinitely

The bill was introduced last year. Debates about the bill were drowned out by other controversial bills such as the oil tax reform bill.

However, several village entities and watershed alliances in the Norton Sound region have voiced their vigorous opposition to the bill. The Native Village of Elim, the Native Village of White Mountain, and the Norton Bay Inter-tribal Watershed Alliance went on record to oppose the proposed bill.

"What began as an efficiency permitting bill has morphed into a heated debate and it's driving Alaskans apart," said Senator Giessel "It is clear that this bill raised a lot of concern among constituents and at this point there doesn't seem to be a resolution."

The Senate Resources Committee took over six hours of public testimony, hearing from every corner of the state. Chair Giessel received more than 1,500 letters, resolutions and petitions both for and against Language of the bill would have eliminated the word "persons" from a section that defines who is eligible to apply for instream flow reservation for the "protection of fish and wildlife habitat, migration, and propagation. This effectively would have removed persons or tribal governments from being able to reserve water flow. Under the proposed bill, only municipal, state or federal entities would have been able to reserve water. This would have resulted in cutting out large parts of rural Alaska from participating in watershed preservation efforts.

The bill in its last throes underwent some changes, but not to the satisfaction of the bill's opponents. "Thanks to the public input we've received over the past year, I think major improvements were made to the bill," said Senator Giessel. "However, I can't justify spending any more time considering this legislation this session."

Senate President Charlie Huggins agreed. "The idea behind HB77 was good— to streamline the permitting process and help clear up a huge backlog," said Senator Huggins. "However, some of our members have concerns and I agree with Senator Giessel. We, as a Senate, need to be focusing on Alaska's highest priorities right now which are increasing oil production, creating affordable energy, cutting state spending and stopping federal overreach. So, with so much on the Senate's plate right now, we have decided not to move forward on this legislation at this time."

Senator Giessel's decision to keep HB77 in committee indefinitely means it will die along with all other not-passed legislation when the Legislature adjourns 'sine die' later this

NOAA to develop oil spill and disaster plan for region

By Diana Haecker

In light of increased ship traffic in the Arctic and through the Bering Strait, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration has begun working on an Arctic Marine Mammal disaster response plan. Sadie Wright with NOAA Fisheries said that NOAA currently operates under a number of oil spill contingency plans including the National Contingency Plan and the Alaska Unified Plan, which is a U.S. Coast Guard and EPA coordinated oil spill response plan for Alaska, and NOAA Fisheries National Marine Mammal Guidelines. However, those plans are not specific to the region.

"NOAA Fisheries saw a need to focus on the Bering Strait and the Arctic due to increased oil and gas development and increased shipping due to melting sea ice and opening of a Northwest Passage," said Sadie Wright. "This plan gives NOAA Fisheries the opportunity to work with communities to develop a communication and response strategy that will work well for this region.

The plan covers species co-managed by NOAA including bowhead whales, gray whales, beluga whales, ringed seals, bearded seals, ribbon seals. Steller sea lions and killer whales, but not walruses.

The plan is supposed to respond to any type of disaster that results in injured, sick, or dead marine mammals, for example, oil spills or other manmade disasters and natural disasters such as disease or tsunamis.

NOAA contracted with marine biologist Jen Duschane to develop an oil spill disaster plan for the region. Duschane traveled to Nome a few weeks ago to meet with UAF Alaska Sea Grant Marine Advisory Program agent Gay Sheffield, representatives from Norton Sound Economic Development Corp., the City of Nome, Kawerak, Nome Eskimo Community and the Eskimo Walrus Commission.

Wright noted that walruses are not directly covered in the NOAA Fisheries plan because that species is managed by US Fish and Wildlife Service. "But we understand that information will likely be routed through the EWC regarding oiled walrus and other marine mammals so we wanted to coordinate with that organization as well," said Wright. "While in Nome, we also spoke with other community members and organizations on the phone in Teller, Shishmaref, Diomede, Gambell and Savoonga.'

They also traveled to Wainwright, Kotzebue and Barrow to meet with community members.

After their meetings in Nome, Wright said that everyone they spoke with was interested in receiving training to be able to safely handle and sample dead oiled or potentially oiled marine mammals. "We also learned that webinars, or other online training would work well in these communities. We received input regarding how to most efficiently contact the greatest number of people with information about disasters or the results of sampling.'

Asked if the NMFS plan will be integrated with other federal agencies' plans to protect marine mammals and other species in the Bering Strait/Arctic area, Wright said "Yes, we are planning to link this Arctic marine mammal plan to other, more general statewide and national oil spill response plans. We also want to link our response plan with future wildlife-related plans written by other federal agencies to ensure that the information is easily accessible."

The agency aims to finalize the plan near the end of 2014. NOAA Fisheries is accepting input regarding the plan that has not yet been drafted. Please contact Sadie Wright at Sadie.wright@noaa.gov.

NOAA Fisheries is planning to make the draft plan available for public review in about six months. For more information go to https://alaskafisheries.noaa.gov/protectedresources/default.htm

Thank you Nome - Youth food drive successful

In partnership with the Nome Native Youth Leadership Organization, and Nome Public School's Community Engagement youth, the Leaders of Life have been working together to honor our region's values. Each week Nome Beltz High School highlights a traditional value from the region, and the combined youth leadership group will choose a featured value for each month and develop a project that demonstrates the value. February's Community Project was based on: Share what you have, giving makes you richer. In the picture above, youth gather together to sort the food boxes that were placed in local stores. The food gathered in the month of February will be sent to the communities of Gambell, Savoonga and Diomede. These communities face a food shortage due to low walrus harvest. Twenty boxes of food were donated by the community of Nome during the month of February. Bering Air and Evergreen have generously donated all freight to get these boxes to Savoonga, Gambell and Diomede. Thank you to the community of Nome for your generosity. Thank you to NBHS youth leadership groups for having com-land.

Savoonga and Gambell residents had concerns about higher rates of cancer and illnesses that were suspected to stem from toxic waste left by former military installations on the island. The report found that in the 15-year time period between 1996 and 2011, there were 33 cases of cancer from Savoonga and 37 cases from Gambell. The report concludes that while the number of observed cases in Gambell exceeds the number of expected cases, the combined number of cases also exceeds the number of expected cases by two, "the standard incidence ratio statistical test does not indicate that this result is statistically significant."

Gorn broke down the cancer occurrences, saying that 30 percent were lung cancer, 11 percent were colon cancer and 7 percent were breast cancer.

"Therefore, we cannot conclude that the observed number of cases reflects a real cancer increase," the report says.

Gorn added that Norton Sound is taking a pro-active approach in stressing the importance of cancer prevention screenings, smoke cessation efforts and diet consultation. "The prevailing causes are smoking and diet," said Gorn. "Those are factors we can control. We know we have a large smoking population here in our region and this is an area we can make a difference."

Gorn said that NSHC makes smoke cessation and prevention screening a priority.

Talking business, Gorn said that NSHC focuses on revenue capture by getting people enrolled in Medicaid or Medicare when eligible in order to stretch Indian Health Service funds further. "The more we capture from third party payers the more we can put back into health care improvements," she said.

Village Health Services director Chris Hansen updated the board on the status of village clinics. This summer, Wales will see an upgrade; the Shishmaref clinic will be renovated, a housing project in St. Michael will start in partnership with Kawerak to build a triplex to house two health care providers and a VPSO. The NSHC board approved $400,000 each for two 5,500 sf clinics in Savoonga and Gambell.

NSHC and the City and Native Village of Little Diomede will collaborate on the design of a new 2,000 sf clinic for Diomede.

Hansen is working on replacing or purchasing new vehicles for patient transport in the villages.

Hansen said NSHC is in the process of reestablishing the Code Blue program with the state so that vehicles that have fallen into disrepair can be replaced. Once the new vehicles arrive, NSHC will keep ownership of them and will establish a maintenance program to make sure the vehicles are kept in good repair.

The same goes for clinics, Hansen said. "We currently assess where each individual clinic is at and we hopefully experience less closures by having maintenance on boilers and heaters done regularly to make sure that we have clean and warm clinics," said Hansen.

Gorn could not yet reveal news on the identity of a buyer for the old hospital. NSHC is still negotiating and the deal has not yet been closed.

Gorn said although the old hospital won't be housing the Wellness Center, a different concept has materialized. The Wellness & Training Center would put Behavioral Health Services, Public Health Nursing, Health Aide Training and Emergency Medical Services training under one roof in a new building east of the new hospital.

This will allow for intensive outpatient therapy and a detox facility for long-term substance abuse treatment

The need for such a facility was wholeheartedly echoed by Anvil Mountain Correctional Center Superintendent Lucy Dittmar. AMCC has a capacity of 108 inmates and serves a geographical area between Point Lay and Stebbins. Dittmar said that alcohol is involved in 99.9 percent of crimes that lead to incarceration at AMCC.

When Kawerak chairman Robert Keith asked if there is anything Kawerak can advocate for in Juneau, Dittmar answered, "We need a residential alcohol and substance abuse program here."

"It's something Nome really lacks, it would be used and would have a big impact," she said.

Kawerak board director Ruth Ojanen repeatedly asked throughout the meeting if Nome youth is taught about barrier crimes and the consequences. "Is anybody is taking atrisk-youth to tour AMCC?" Ojanen asked

"No," said Dittmar. "Not yet. But we had the Boy Scouts come through and they went away with a different view of incarceration. I don't think they'd be so eager to come back."

Alcohol and crime

Nome City Manager Josie Bahnke echoed Dittmar's assessment that new, synthetic drugs such as Spice etc. are bad news and are making their way into Nome and the surrounding communities. She reported to the two boards that the Common Council has passed ordinances banning the sale and use of Spice. The city's law enforcement, the Nome Police Department is staffed with six officers, two sergeants, one chief and two Community Service officers. In addition, officer Justin Timm will come to Nome with a trained K-9 dog for drug detection and interdictions.

Drug and alcohol-fueled crimes are Alaska State Trooper Sergeant Charlie Cross's concern and he pleaded with both boards to make sure that a village brings up children by having good role models. "Law enforcement is the last line of defense," Cross said. In fighting importation of alcohol into local option communities, Cross reminded the boards that he and his troopers need more than anonymous tips. "Those anonymous calls and reports carry no weight in a court of law," he said. "We need people to say 'I'm willing to testify in court', then we can do something." Cross reminded the boards that the first lines of defense against alcohol and drug abuse are family members. "The first line is parents, uncles, aunties, grandparents. I'm a father and I can tell you that my kids push the line and they will go as far as I will let them," Cross said. "Troopers have a role in preventing and enforcement of the laws, but we all have to make sure that our youth is in schools, not in the system," he said.

Education

Nome Public Schools Superintendent Steve Gast as well as Bering Strait School District Superintendent Brett Agenbroad presented news from their school districts.

Gast showed a multimedia presentation filmed and produced by students. Ruth Ojanen wanted to see more education given to children on barrier crimes. Tiffany Martinson, NSHC director, said as an employer at NSEDC, the top two reasons why she turns people away is that people have no drivers license and their crime records.

BSSD Superintendent Brett Agenbroad broke the bad news that some grants will go away next year for Early Childhood Education, forcing BSSD to let go of three or four certified teachers for pre-school programs.

Agenbroad informed the boards about culturally relevant teaching.

BSSD provides culture camps for new teachers and also tries to embed cultural messages in the core curriculum. For example, he said, the district developed a curriculum on kuspuk making, including the proper vocabulary, biometrics on how to measure the hood and all the material needed. "The curriculum is sent in a tote containing everything they need to all the culture teachers in the district," Agenbroad said.

To bring more home grown teachers back into the villages who are able to teach culturally relevant curricula, Agenbroad proposed an idea to tackle the college drop out rate at the root.

He presented a vision of the BSSD board to build a College House in Anchorage, which would house BSSD and Nome students to give them a home outside of their region and to prevent homesickness and the overwhelming feeling of being alone in the city. "Let's come up with a house, an island where students can have a supportive environment in college," he said. "We need to stay with our alumni for two years past their high school graduation."

Agenbroad gave statistics that are not promising. In a five-year period, 59 students enrolled at the University of Alaska, Anchorage and only five graduated.

"I think we can do better than that," Agenbroad said. In finishing the thought, he said, if five students from each community became teachers, it would mean an infusion of $250,000 into each village annually. In order to get more students to become teachers and return to their villages, the College House is seen as a step in the right direction. For example, Agenbroad said, the North Slope Borough built a $1 million dorm in Anchorage for their students and have a tremendous success seeing them through the first years of college.

Modeled on the North Slope's success, Agenbroad said a College House would pick the kids up, help them through the first two years and provide native foods and the support needed to make it in the big city.

Marine update

Gay Sheffield with the UAF Marine Advisory Program updated the boards via teleconference on Bering Strait marine research news. In general, Bering Strait residents have concerns about the increase of marine traffic and how it could effect the health of the ecosystem and humans. Currently, federal and state agencies are conducting walrus biomonitoring at St. Lawrence Island, ice seal monitoring in the North Slope Borough and the Northwest Arctic Borough, as well as in Shishmaref, Gambell and Savoonga. Sheffield began a data set of dead non-harvested marine mammals and has so far counted nine whale strandings, 25 dead walrus strandings, two sea lions and 18 seals. She also still collected data on Unusual Mortality Event suspected seals, showing hair loss, skin sores and delayed molt. Of those, she counted 10 spotted seals, eight ringed and six bearded seals.

The National Marine Mammal Laboratory and the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management is conducting a study to determine relationships between prey animals and dominant currents passing from the Bering Sea into and through the Chukchi Sea.

The study will also provide important baseline data on the occurrence, distribution and habitat use of large whales in an area subject to rapid changes in climate and human industrial development. As part of their study, they deploy acoustic recording devices along the northern coast off Nome and in the Bering Sea. The Wildlife Conservation Society, PEW Charitable Trust and residents of Savoonga and Gambell collaborate on a project that aims to establish a dataset of ambient underwater sound levels near St. Lawrence Island.

Two spotted seals were taken captive out of the Bering Sea and are now at the University of California at Santa Cruz to help scientists understand how spotted seals are affected by noise from ship traffic, air guns or drilling activity. The results show that seals have remarkably sensitive hearing in air and water. Sheffield, the Whaling Captains Association and the North Slope Borough are collaborating on a bowhead whale health assessment documenting scarring and injuries of caught whales as well as documenting marine debris entanglement of marine mammals.

After Sheffield's presentation, both boards heard and adopted a resolution to "encourage monitoring of contaminants and pollution and for researchers to provide useful reports to tribes." The resolution states that "the potential for pollution events includes oil spills, cargo or fuel spills, novel disease, invasive species, radiation, increased underwater vessel noise, marine debris, plastic, as well as heavy metals and organochlorine contaminants" and that "the presence and movement of contaminants which can impact wildlife and can potentially be transferred to consumers is of high concern.'

The resolution demands accountable contaminant and pollution related research and that such research be conducted in the context of human health, public health, food safety and food security.

Kawerak

Kawerak Inc. President Melanie Bahnke reported that the Education, Employment and Training Division is organizing an Education Summit to be held in Nome. The Community Services Division secured a grant for Essential Air Services for passenger service to Little Diomede through June 2015. The VPSO program is housed in the same division, and reports the employment of 11 VPSOs, one itinerant VPSO who travels the region and is available upon request. VPSO openings are in Diomede, Elim, St.Michael, Savoonga, Shaktoolik, Stebbins, Teller and Wales. VPSO Sergeant Winfred Olanna Jr. of Brevig Mission received the VPSO of the Year award.

Bahnke informed the boards that Kawerak plans a gathering on Arctic shipping concerns and a Disaster Summit in addition to the Education Summit.

Echoing the dire reports from state and federal agencies of funding shortfalls, Bahnke said Kawerak shifted to seek funding from private foundations. For example, Kawerak has administered a grant for fuel vouchers from the Citizens Energy Corporation to deliver 100 gallons of fuel to regional households who applied. This year, the grant has dried up to the point where Kawerak only issues vouchers to the surrounding communities, not Nome, for a total of $248 per household.

Bahnke said that a grant has been awarded for the documentation of how to make a bird skin parkie and that Kawerak is pursuing funding to put on an Arctic Shipping conference. "Our region has many things to tackle," Bahnke said. "I have many sleepless nights over how many challenges we're facing, but I feel we do make progress."

Recycling

Along those lines, Bahnke reported that last year, Kawerak's recycling program was able to ship 40,000 pounds of recyclables out of Nome and to Seattle. Anahma Shannon gave a presentation on the state of trash in Nome and the surrounding communities. While it was standard procedure to burn trash in the past, Shannon warned that trash nowadays is no longer organic but consists of synthetic materials and plastics that turn into toxic ash once burned. "Those toxins then settle on our land, the plants and the animals and we end up accumulating these toxins in us," Shannon said.

Also, the Environmental Protection Agency's tribal Indian General Assistance Program will no longer fund recycling or backhaul programs, effective October 1, 2014.

To solve the problem of accumulating trash and fading funds to get rid of it, Shannon proposed building a regional transfer station for recyclables in Nome. Currently, a few Connex vans at Warren Place in Nome serve as a recycling center. There, fluorescent bulbs, lead acid batteries, household batteries, newspapers, office paper, aluminum cans and electronic waste crowd a tiny space that is often overflowing. Once a year, the contents are bundled and shipped out with the last barges to leave Nome. Shannon said that the creation of a self-sustaining transfer station in Nome would make sense as a bigger storage space would allow for more recyclables to be accepted. This would justify an industrial-sized baler, which in turn would

A new you: How to restore the human body

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Here is a strange but true biological reality. The body you have right now is not the body you will have next year.

Every day your body forms new cells to replace the older cells that die, decay, or slough off. Like a microscopic factory, the tissues of your body use the molecules you eat and the gasses you breathe to manufacture new skin, muscles, bones, nerves, and blood cells.

The rate of cell turnover depends on the function of the cells in a particular part of the body. Cells that line the esophagus and stomach are replaced every 3-5 days. You make a new layer of skin every two weeks. Red blood cells live about 120 days. The cells of the liver are replaced every year or so.

Some cells remain much longer. Your skeleton is completely replaced every ten years. And about one half of the muscle cells that make up your heart will be replaced in your lifetime.

Scientists estimate the average cell in the human adult is 7 to 10 years old.

The only cells you keep for a lifetime are the cells in the lens of the eye (unless you have lens replacements) and the neurons of the cerebral cortex. In other words, your brain is yours from birth to death, but everything else is temporary.

Herein lies a bit of encourag-ALASKA ing news. You have options re-FAMILY garding the body DOCTOR you will have 10 years from now. If there is something unhealthy about your body, in many cases you have a chance to swap out items for new parts.

But an improvement in your health does not happen by accident. Improvement requires thoughtful changes regarding nutrition, daily activity, sleep schedules, and sources of stress. If nothing about your lifestyle changes then you will always look and feel the same, perhaps worse, than you do right now.

In a sense, cell turnover in the body it is like changing clothes by changing just one thread at a time. If you use good material by eating right, avoiding tobacco, and staying physically and mentally active, you will stitch together a strong garment that complements your personality and lifestyle. Choose poorly and you will find the body becomes a poorly coordinated outfit that sags in unsightly areas and is easily damaged by normal wear and tear.

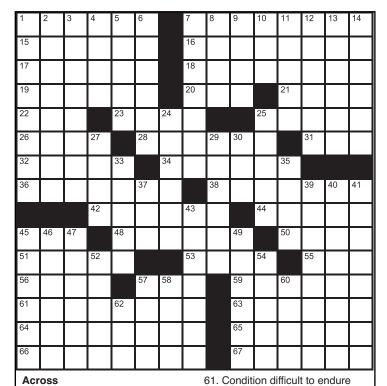

So next time you are walking the grocery aisle or scanning a restaurant menu, avoid merely thinking, "What should I eat for dinner?" Rather think, "What type of body do I want to work on building today?

Load up on the vegetables, fish, fruits, whole grains, beans, nuts, and dairy. Avoid processed foods, pop, sugary drinks, tobacco products, chips, and foods with saturated fats.

And do something physically active. Walk, bike, or ski to work. If one part of the body does not work well, exercise the other parts. The joints of the body are like machines that tend to rust with lack of use. Furthermore, the body repairs areas that receive more use. For example, weight-bearing exercise increases bone formation in the parts of the body bearing the weight.

And do not get discouraged by the slow rate at which the body adapts. Though it may take time to see changes, day-to-day healthy decisions will ensure the body you are rebuilding is a healthy one.

sible, help with homework. The homes of children who thrive educationally often have parents who post schoolwork and report cards on the wall as a means to show how important academic success is to the family. Supportive homes require children to be in bed at reasonable hours each day so they are well rested and ready for school. Parents need to do these things to ensure their children thrive.

At what point is the school staff expected to enter the homes of students who struggle and change the home environment? And, is this the role of public education? I do not think it is. And, is it being fair to expect teachers to be completely successful with the numerous at-risk children they teach each day? I do not think it is. Especially when I consider the overwhelming research that suggests a child's home environment has more to do with academic success than the quality of education the child receives. I believe educators are trying everything they can to help their students. I know the teachers become frustrated when they do not successfully teach every child.

What our children and families could benefit from is a program similar to the Head Start program which would follow and track children through high school and also offer support and give information to parents that would allow them to help their children thrive in the classroom.

If we are sincere about helping all kids succeed, we need people who are willing to roll up their sleeves to work to remove the roadblocks some parents face which lead to students who struggle. Working toward these goals responsibly should improve the education our children receive.

I believe our community can help. A good first step in this direction is to have realistic expectations of what our school can accomplish with under-prepared children. Appropriate community expectations should take some of the pressure off the school to solve all of these problems by itself.

Stabilizing administrators, teachers, and school programs in conjunction with programs that offer support and promote academic success at home is surely going to be more productive than just focusing on changing the school. Best Regards.

Sullivan's Ohio Family Can Spend Even More After Court Ruling

Supreme Court ruling allows multi-millionaires further financial leverage in elections

ANCHORAGE: As the Koch brothers spend over $1.5 million to influence Alaska's elections through secret groups and anonymous money, the Supreme Court has removed caps on the total amount individuals can donate to federal candidates and Political Action Committees (PAC) nationwide. Sullivan's Ohio family already has invested heavily in his Alaska Senate campaign and is noted for their national political influence and fundraising

The "McCutcheon" ruling would allow the Ohio-based family of U.S. Senate candidate Dan Sullivan to fund an unlimited amount of Outside groups to support Sullivan's candidacy. A single member of the Sullivan family gave over $89,000 to candidates and PACs in the 2012 election cycle and may now spend unlimited amounts of money without an aggregate cap on donations to federal candidates and PACs.

"Unlimited spending has allowed super-wealthy individuals to funnel money into races like Alaska's, and the latest Supreme Court decision just opens the flood gates to more spending by Dan Sullivan's Outside supporters," said Mike Wenstrup, Chair of the Alaska Democratic Party.

Sullivan family members still own and operate the Ohiobased international chemical company RPM International and are reliable donors to political candidates and campaigns. When Sullivan announced his candidacy last October, Washington, DC publication The Hill noted, "He has deep connections with some Beltway players, and his brother is a top fundraiser for and ally of Sen. Rob Portman (R-Ohio).

PACs are able to provide donations and assistance to federal candidates such as Dan Sullivan at a limit of $10,000. There is no limit on the number of PACs capable of providing assistance to a campaign.

Dan Sullivan himself has donated more money to federal candidates for office in Ohio than Alaska. He has received more campaign funding from Ohio than from in Alaska. He produced more than 30% of his campaign money from the Cleveland-area despite refusing to speak to his hometown newspaper and reported just over 100 Alaskans on his campaign finance report.

House passes fix to commercial fish "dude" licenses House abides Seaton bill to close temporary crew license loophole

JUNEAU— The Alaska House of Representatives unanimously passed a bill by Rep. Paul Seaton to fix a loophole in state law relating to temporary commercial fishing crew "dude" licenses. House Bill 143 will limit crew to purchasing a single temporary license per year, instead of buying numerous temporary licenses.

rary licenses.

"The goal is to stop losing the revenue from the real yearlong crew licenses, which is a loophole being exploited," Seaton, R-Homer, said. "The 'dude' licenses were intended to provide tourists with the opportunity to try commercial fishing to help expand our tourism market. Certain short term fisheries like Bristol Bay, however, see some people buying consecutive temporary licenses instead of the annual license."

Seaton said there has been an increase in the number of 7-day licenses sold since the program began in 2005, with 47 purchased the first year, and 1344 purchased in 2012. The estimated lost revenue to the state is more than $285,000. "Dude" licenses cost only $30 and last for seven days. HB143 keeps that level, but limits buyers to one license per year, allowing a buyer to apply for reimbursement should they later purchase an annual license.

HB 143, which passed by a vote of 38-0, now moves to the Alaska Senate for consideration.

Rep. Pete Higgins cancels hearing on popular Medicaid bill

Stories from across Alaska show toll of Medicaid Gap but GOP not taking action on bill to extend coverage

ANCHORAGE: Rep. Pete Higgins (R-Fairbanks) is cancelling a hearing on a popular bill to accept federal Medicaid funding and expand health coverage in Alaska. Medicaid expansion with federal funding has been endorsed by a wide range of groups including the Chamber of Commerce, Hospital and Nursing Home Association, ANCSA Regional Association, Anchorage Faith and Action-Congregations Together, Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium, and NAACP.

"It is shameful that Pete Higgins is cancelling this hearing on Medicaid expansion when Alaskans are losing health coverage because of the Medicaid Gap," said Mike Wenstrup, Chair of the Alaska Democratic Party.

Alaskans from across the state are falling into the Medicaid Gap. The state's non-partisan legislative research agency says "scores of deaths" will result from Parnell's Medicaid Gap. Alaskans are telling their stories about falling into Parnell's Medicaid Gap:

Personal Stories: Alaskans Fall Into Parnell's Medicaid Gap

Audrey Saylor, who works six days a week at two jobs, doesn't earn enough money to qualify for Medicaid as a result of Parnell's Medicaid Gap, reports the Anchorage Daily News.

· Hillary Hotten, who works and obtains provisions through subsistence activities near Fairbanks, falls in the Medicaid Gap and called it a "sock in the gut." Medicaid could provide a safety net for Hotten if Parnell hadn't denied coverage, reports KUAC, which also reported that "lots" of Fairbanks residents fall in the Medicaid Gap.

·Wayne and Sarah Taranoff own a gift shop in Sitka and have spent as much as 60% of their income on medical bills in the past. Yet because of Parnell's Medicaid Gap, they don't qualify for Medicaid coverage, reports KCAW.

A Nabesna worker with cystic fibrosis was denied coverage because of the Medicaid Gap and had to seek work outside of Alaska because he couldn't find affordable health care here, according to an Anchorage Daily News Compass column.

According to the Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium, Medicaid expansion would expand health insurance to some 40,000 Alaskans with a 28:1 return-on-investment ratio for Alaska. APRN noted that this expansion of health coverage, along with other reforms in the Affordable Care Act, would reduce the number of uninsured Alaskans by 50 percent. The Anchorage Daily News, Fairbanks Daily News Miner, and others opined in favor of Medicaid expansion. which was endorsed by a wide range of groups including the Chamber of Commerce, Hospital and Nursing Home Association, Anchorage Faith and Action-Congregations Together, Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium, and NAACP.

Speaker Chenault to introduce AGDC Board Member Bill Speaker respects intent of SB124 sponsor, will still push for fix to law

JUNEAU — Alaska Speaker of the House Mike Chenault announced that he will ask the House Rules Committee to introduce a bill amending the Alaska Gasline Development Corporation statute to allow out-of-state appointees to the Board of Directors.

Speaker Chenault, R-Nikiski, made the decision prior to Thursday's Rules hearing on his proposed amendment to Senate Bill 124. A statement from the Speaker follows.

"I thought I had SB 124 sponsor's support to make this fix; I was mistaken despite the fact he didn't object to my amending his bill. There is not, and has never been, any intent to place the domestic violence council at risk. I know my caucus, the House, the Senate, would never jeopardize such an important entity in our state. Ever.

"Now that it is clear that the bill sponsor doesn't support the amendment I proposed, I will not force the issue. Only with his agreement could this mechanism have worked without threatening the domestic violence council.

"I want a discussion of the amendment, and we've had that now in the Rules Committee. However, I have withdrawn my amendment after discussion. I am going to request a bill spon-

Don't be fooled (again) by phony support for minimum wage

By Ed Flanagan

In the Superman comic books of my youth, "Bizarro World" was a parallel universe where everyday was Opposite Day. Up meant down, bad meant good, the world was a cube, and Bizarro Superman and Bizarro Lois Lane looked like the Addams family on a bad hair day.

In the Bizarro World that is the Alaska Legislature, we find ourselves in a situation where the only right vote on ANY minimum wage bill introduced by the House Majority late in the session is NO.

Even to those accustomed to cynicism and insincerity in the Legislature, the sudden interest in passing a minimum wage law that would preempt the voter initiative is breathtaking in the contempt and disrespect for the intelligence of Alaskan voters it demonstrates. Protestations by House Majority Leader Lance Pruitt notwithstanding, his Majority would only pass a bill identical to the initiative for two reasons, neither having anything to do with the best interests of Alaskan workers. The first would be to avoid bringing out low-income voters who might not vote as the Majority would prefer in statewide races or on other ballot measures. The second is to come back next year and repeal key provisions of the law before they take effect, as was done in 2003.

In 2001, bills to increase the minimum wage and index it to inflation were stalled in the legislature. The AFL-CIO gathered 50,000 signatures for an initiative mirroring Governor Knowles' bill, which was approved for the November 2002 ballot. As with the current initiative, polls showed 70% support for the measure. After trying to move a bill without indexing, which they were advised would not meet the test of "substantially similar" legislation required to block the vote, the Legislature passed a bill identical to the initiative, sponsored by House Speaker Pete Kott, in May 2002.

Kott was asked if the bill had been passed only to keep the initiative off the ballot and curb turnout by low-income voters who might lean Democratic. Here's what he told the Associated Press on May 16, 2002:

'Rep. Pete Kott, R-Eagle River, has said that was not his motivation for sponsoring the bill. Kott had proposed a smaller increase in 2001 but changed his bill to match the ballot initiative. He has said it is better for the Legislature to address the measure than leave it to voters. That way, if legislators decide to change the inflation provision, they can do so next year, Kott said. If the change were made through a ballot initiative, they'd have to wait two years.

Kott knew what he was doing and was, in this case, true to his word. In May 2003, the Legislature repealed the indexing provision in a bill signed by Frank Murkowski. Seventeen Majority legislators who had voted for the bill in 2002 voted to gut it in 2003.

Had they left the indexing provision in place, Alaska's minimum wage would be $9.53 today, rather than $7.75, a huge difference in the lives of thousands of hard working Alaskans.

A move is afoot to pull the same cynical stunt this year, preempting the minimum wage initiative already approved for the August ballot as Ballot Measure 3. While House Majority Leader Lance Pruitt claims it is wrong to assume history will repeat itself, representatives of the hospitality industry work the halls with a top lobbyist seeking support for legislation to do just that. Is Pruitt really unaware that one in four of current Republican legislators voted to gut the 2002 bill in 2003? He is being disingenuous - at best - when he dismisses valid concerns of initiative supporters. A young man with likely statewide ambitions, he should consider finding a better role model than Pete Kott.

If a minimum wage bill is introduced, Alaskans need to let legislators know we won't be fooled again. They should stop playing games and insulting our intelligence, and let the people vote on the initiative. At least the Majority would then have to wait two years to thwart the will of the people.

Ed Flanagan is chair of Alaskans for a Fair Minimum Wage (www.Alaska-NeedsaRaise.org), the sponsor of the minimum wage initiative which has been certified for the August election as Ballot Measure 3. He served as labor commissioner under Governor Tony Knowles from January 1999 to Decem-sored by House Rules by request that amends AGDC's statute in order to allow for out-of-state board appointments, and I hope to have this bill through the process before confirmations this

"Mr. Rabinow, of Texas, is on the list of appointments we're to take up. I want us to be able to vote on confirmation on the merits of Mr. Rabinow, and that means his appointment has to be allowable by statute. If people vote for him, OK. If people vote against him, OK. But let's have the vote. And regardless of Mr. Rabinow's nomination, AGDC's statute should be amended to fix a technical oversight and reflect the intent of the Legislature. That desire – which was clear in testimony last year – is that the governor has the ultimate discretion in appointing the most qualified people to lead AGDC in carrying out its mission to develop projects that get gas to Alaskans.

"AGDC's board includes two commissioners. The governor appoints five public members. By statute, the governor is encouraged to appoint people who bring specific qualifications expertise in pipeline construction, large project management, and so on.

"By statute, AGDC's mission requires the board and the corporation to act in Alaskans' best interests.

And the board is all-Alaskan, except for one appointee. Bear in mind that no matter how hard the board works to develop a project with Alaskans' interests in mind, if the board lacks the global expertise to bring a project to fruition, they risk failing Alaskans

"Alaskans lose if a project is not developed well, constructed on time and on budget, and under terms with the major oil and gas producers that serve Alaskans well. Who better to understand the way the majors operate, and then to use that knowledge for the benefit of Alaskans, than a candidate with Mr. Rabinow's resume?

"HB 4 was complex legislation; 59 pages long. As is often the case in this process, we don't always get it all right the first time around. HB 4 specifically laid out a structure for AGDC as a corporation, defining what the Legislature wanted as far as board appointments, items generally addressed in 39.05, existing statute related to public officers and employees.

'Alaska Statute 39.05.100 requires board appointees to be Alaskans, unless otherwise provided. HB 4 laid out board requirements, without specifically stating whether members had to be Alaskans or not; legal guidance at the time, plus testimony, was that the HB 4 language allowed out-of-state and Alaskans to serve. What we neglected to do – and this was an oversight - is to specifically exempt AGDC from 39.05.100, after we put into AGDC's statutes what we intended."

turn the endeavor into a profitable proposition because it would allow Kawerak to sell the bales.

Right now, Kawerak actually pays a Seattle recycling firm to take Nome's e-waste off their hands.

However, aluminum is sold and recycled into new cans. In partnership with the City of Nome, the landfill now accepts cardboard and glass.

The glass is crushed by a dozer and used to cover up the landfill. Shannon said that the City is looking at their budget to see if they can afford a commercial glass crusher which would make uniform, pea gravel size bits of glass that could be sold back to residents for use in gardens and yards.

Kawerak obtained two small balers and stationed them at the landfill. Landfill operator Glenn Jones is using the balers to compact card-

Jones also designed and built an aluminum crusher with which he is able to make dense squares of aluminum cans.

They will be put on pallets and send south this summer.

Shannon then asked the boards blessing in form of passing a resolution to support a regional recycling transfer station. The boards unanimously passed the resolution.

The two-day board meeting ended with Melanie Bahnke reminding Kawerak and NSHC board members that the perpetuation of one's heritage and culture is important.

Thus, she and Vera Metcalf volunteered to teach all board members a St. Lawrence Island Dance titled "Which way should I go?"

They were accompanied by Larry Kava's drum and Preston Rookok's singing, bringing two long days to and end with laughter and unity.

Legislature passes SJR15

By Diana Haecker

Last Friday, the Alaska House of Representatives passed Senate Joint Resolution 15, a resolution urging the federal government to stop pursuing the National Park Service project to create the Beringia transboundary international park or any other international designations identified through the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

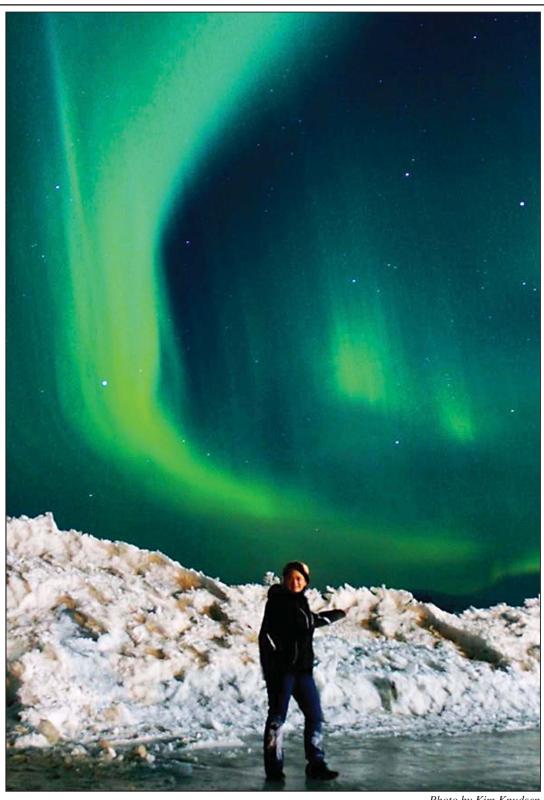

The resolution was sponsored and introduced by Senator Cathy Giessel (R-Anchorage Hillside/Turnagain Arm/N. Kenai). SJR15 urges the Federal Government to stop pursuing the creation of the Beringia International

The Beringia Transboundary area, spanning from eastern Russia over to northwestern Alaska, is meant to bond Russian and northwestern Alaska cultures together. To that effect, United States Secretary of State Hilary Clinton and present Secretary of State John Kerry and the National Park Service with representatives from Russia had drafted a Memorandum of Understanding.

SJR 15 strongly urges the federal government to pause this process and consult the State of Alaska on this MOU and any further federal or United Nations designations in the future. It also requires if any land designations are made, both the U.S. Congress and the Alaska State Legislature have to approve them.

Representative Eric Feige (R-Chickaloon) brought SJR 15 to the House Floor and was instrumental in its passing. The resolution is on its way to the Governor. Copies of the resolution will be distributed to President Obama, members of his cabinet and the Alaska Congressional delegation.

Council refuses port price hike for fuel and cargo

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council approved most parts of a Port of Nome tariff package that they had passed into first reading at the panel's last regular meeting March 24, but balked at raising rates that would be passed on to consumers.

At the end of their April 14 meeting, the panel brought the measure back to the table, amended it and passed the tariff unanimously.

Following a 10 percent increase last shipping season, the port commission presented a revised Port of Nome Tariff No.9 for Council approval that raised rates by another five percent across the board, including costs for cargo and fuel going across the port.

The only exceptions to five percent were for summer and winter rates for idle vessel storage, which changed upward to reflect the broader beams and footprints of increased length vessels using the port.

Fifteen percent hike in two years was too much for Councilman Tom

Sparks recognized that consumers in Nome would feel the increase at the check stand rather than shipping companies who would pass the higher charges along with their

"It seems like we're making a substantial rate increase," Sparks said. "Prices of fuel and cargo do add up for us locals.'

While the Council debated whether to reconsider, port projects manager Joy Baker urged that the panel at least pass the tariff revision with the new language and rule changes intact.

"If the wharfage rates are causing the problem, you could extract those from the rate increase and pass the remainder of the document," she suggested.

Guided by the theme of "Living our Traditional Values Today and Tomorrow," Kawerak's annual regional conference offered a packed agenda tackling topics ranging from energy, substance abuse and historic trauma. subsistence and climate change ramifications, to traditional knowledge and language preservation.

Over three days, Nome's Rec Center was packed with approximately 500 regional and local delegates attending the conference. At night, dance groups such as the King

The walls of the Rec Center gym were decorated with portraits of Elders and children to emphasize the theme of continuation of traditional values from the older generation to the next. Bleachers were set up in the middle of the room to separate informational tables and vendor booths from the main conference section.

The conference began on Tuesday morning with a keynote address from First Alaskans Institute CEO and President Liz Medicine Crow. Medicine Crow, a Tlingit-Haida from Southeast Alaska, spoke about her youth growing up in Kake and how her life has been shaped by her family and grandparents. She talked about the lessons she learned from her grandparents about freedom and sovereignty. "I made up tummy aches and head aches to not have to go to school," she said. "I knew I could go to my grandparents and sit there all day and listen to them. There I learned what freedom meant, what sovereignty meant, what our clan meant. Those were lessons I would've never learned in school,' Medicine Crow said. Dear Editor:

April 9,2014 Yesterday, leaving work, I saw a small boy with a backpack, maybe four-years-old, struggling along the steep northern shoulder of Greg Kruschek Ave. walking toward the hospital. He was alone. Something was not quite right. I circled around, parked, and went looking for him. I found him crouching behind a snow bank at the edge of the hospital's parking lot, obviously confused. I tried to connect with him, asking him to wait while I jogged over to NSHC Security for help. Security promptly joined me, but when we got back he was

A group of NSHC smokers nearby suggested he had walked toward the hospital. Security and I checked, but didn't see him. Then one of the smokers casually pointed out to us a little boy walking in circles and crying on the frozen ice in front of the hospital's parking lot, before going back to her damned cell phone! Shame on this woman and her self-absorbed fellow workers for their disconnected indifference!

The NSHC Security officer, in shirtsleeves, walked out onto the icy field to engage the tearful little boy, and held his hand as he walked him back to the hospital, promising him a treat until they found his Mom and Dad.

Turns out the little guy was supposed to go to Grandpa's, but overshot. He was soon reunited with Mom and Dad.

Thank you, NSHC Security! And please, let's as a community keep an eye out for our children. We are a safe town and they often wander freely, but things can go wrong. William M. Cox M.D. NSHC Radiologist Phones have evolved over the years since 1876 when Alexander Graham Bell yelled the first intelligible phone transmission to his assistant, "Mr. Watson, come here, I want you." Things change fast. The first cell phone call from this Nomeite's car was on the Nome-Beltz Highway with a call to India. Technology is great, however it can also be overwhelming.

Although phones have evolved, our brains are still grounded in the human condition. We cannot text while driving a car. We cannot give full attention to the task at hand when the task demands full attention to the road ahead. Experienced drivers know how quickly conditions can change. A child can dash in front of the car. A musk ox can lumber across the highway. A pedestrian can fall on the road. A patch of ice can grab our tires. If our eyes are on the green glow of the phone we could be in a real world of trouble.

We need laws to protect us from our own incompetence and the stupidity of others. It needs to be illegal to text and drive. One would hope folks would have more sense to allow a text message to demand their response while they steer a ton of steel at high speed on a highway. Hands free devices for phones would protect us from the inattentive driver. Perhaps some day we will have evolved a second brain and a set of texting fingers. — N.L.M.—

into the classroom and improving access to vocational training, I am committed to providing more access to residential schools. I have seen first-hand the terrific opportunities Alaska's residential schools provide to our young people. From the Star of the Northwest Magnet School in Kotzebue, to Bethel, Nenana, Galena and beyond, students prepare for careers in education, health care, resource development, and more.

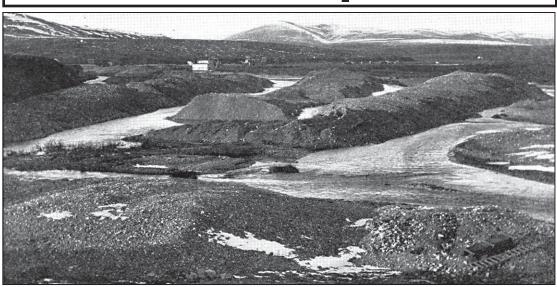

We will work with the state Senate to restore a key provision to increase funds for residential school roomand-board. This will allow more of our young people to gain these opportunities. I am also fighting for our digital teaching initiative to ensure all of Alaska's children have access to the best teachers available.

A special thanks to Senator Donny Olson and Representative Neal Foster for working with me on creating new educational opportunity for our kids.

The Ride to Ophir

On August 30 a party consisting of C. H. Munro, T. M. Gibson, Jafet Lindeberg, A. E. Boyd, Scott Turner, and the writer left Nome for Ophir Creek. Going aboard the Flyer, a 30ton gasoline launch, we went eastward, keeping within sight of the coast as far as Solomon, where the river of that name enters Bering Sea, forming a shallow estuary. Landing would have been simple if we had not run aground and the voyage would have been pleasant if the cold spray had not been flavored with the smell of gasoline, but these are details in which any Alaskan traveler will recognize only bits of local color. At Solomon horses were awaiting us, and I found, much to my pleasure, that 'Tony' was allotted to me. Tony is the finest horse I have ridden in any of my travels about the world; spirited but gentle, strong and willing, with a steady trot that knows no weariness. I found myself mounted in a style not to be expected in a region where horses are scarce. The owner of Tony is T. M. Gibson; to his kindness I am deeply indebted.

Henceforth I shall have two ideals of self-denying courtesy: The first is that of a woman, a musician and a singer, who plays perfectly an accompaniment for a friend, the friend singing badly a song which the accompanist sings exquisitely. The other is that of a man possessing a fine horse, most comfortably gaited, which he lends to a friend, while he himself accompanies the party on a hired animal.

Owing to sundry delays we did not leave Solomon until dark, intending to spend the night at the camp of the Three Friends, whither we had been bidden by W. L. Leland. The distance was only 7 miles, but we must have forded the river fully 17 times. As the horses had been standing in the stable all day and were cold, and as there were many of them together, stimulating to rivalry, we went helter-skelter over corduroy roads, moss, and gravel, taking the fords at a trot, if not at a gallop, splashing in and out of the river, plunging along in the dark, until I wondered which moment was to be my last. In an hour we saw a light ahead and found a man with a lantern to guide us to the road that soon ended at the door of Mr. Leland's hospitable abode. There, in the midst of the cold wilderness, we found "all the comforts of home." An abundant 'supper', a good smoke, and a most interesting discussion, were eventually followed by unfathomable sleep.

The next day opened wet and stormy. Encased in 'slickers,' or water-proof coats, hats, and rubber hip-boots, we went to see the dredge of the Three Friends Mining Company. This successful enterprise was organized by three men who knew what they were about so that the common blunders of the inexperienced were avoided. Firstly, the ground was carefully bested by drilling; secondly, a strong machine was designed on the model of one of the best dredges then working at Oroville, California; thirdly, an experienced crew was engaged; finally, care was taken to avoid frozen ground. These four precautions constitute the A B C of dredging in

House Committee advances Arctic infrastructure bill

This week, the House Labor and Commerce Committee passed a bill that aims at attracting private investment to build Arctic ports, roads, emergency response systems and telecommunications projects.

Senate Bill 140 authorizes the Alaska Industrial Development and Export Authority (AIDEA) to offer several financing options aimed at building public-private partnerships for the development of infrastructure in the Arctic. The financing mechanisms in the bill are modeled after the Sustainable Energy Transmission and Supply Development Fund (SETS).

"By making financing available we can empower communities and attract a global pool of investment that is an alternative to the traditional grant model," said sponsor Senator Lesil McGuire. "Relying on credit also ensures that sponsors have some skin in the game and a stake in the project's success. Most importantly, we expand the arena of where Alaskan assets are working in order to grow our own economy.

SB140 now heads to the House Finance for further consideration.

Coast Guard 17th District will see change of command

Rear Adm. Thomas P. Ostebo, commander of the 17th District, will transfer responsibility, authority and accountability to Rear Adm. Daniel B. Abel, commander, 1st District. Ostebo has commanded the 17th District since May 2011 but recently received a Presidential nomination for promotion to vice admiral. Ostebo is under consideration for the position of Coast Guard Deputy Commandant for Mission Support in Washington, D.C. Ostebo was no stranger to Nome and often visited the Gold Rush city for updates on Coast Guard operations.

From May  $\bar{2}011$  to April 9, 2014 Coast Guard crews conducted 1,692 search and rescue cases, saved 519 lives and assisted 2,202 lives, under his command.

Ostebo helped launch operation Arctic Shield, the Coast Guard's seasonal Arctic operation, to ensure safe, secure, and environmentally re-

Ostebo was instrumental in offering recommendations to the Alaska Arctic Policy Commission on maritime safety and security in the Arc-

Ostebo also helped built partnerships between the Coast Guard, federally recognized tribes and native corporations throughout Alaska to foster sharing of traditional knowledge and best practices. He was a strong advocate for a voluntary vessel routing scheme to address increasing maritime traffic in the Bering Strait and Unimak Pass. He also was instrumental in directing the Coast Guard Cutter Healy icebreaker operation to escort the tanker Renda containing 1.5 million gallons of fuel to Nome in 2012.

He reinforced the message for Arctic drilling safety as he oversaw the response to the grounding of the mobile offshore drilling unit Kulluk, and initiated a formal marine casualty investigation to determine causes to mitigate and prevent future accidents

"It has been a tremendous honor to serve the people of Alaska," said Ostebo. "I am humbled to be nominated and if confirmed as vice admiral, I will endeavor to carry out my new duties in continued support of the Nation, the Coast Guard and

Arctic prone to ship accidents

The Arctic Journal reports that ships in the Arctic face a higher risk of accidents, but improved safety can be achieved by taking simple measures. A study by DNV GL, a Norway-based certification classification agency, based its report on two case studies: a cruise ship sailing off the coast of Greenland and a bulk carrier transiting the Northern Sea Route. The case studies estimated that the risk of accident was 30 percent higher for a cruise ship and 15 percent higher for a bulk carrier compared with conventional danger stemmed from a lack of search and rescue services, while for cargo ships it was due to the danger of collision with ice.

DNV GL said the study underscored that the risks facing maritime traffic in the Arctic varied based on location and type of activity.

The study follows a recent DNV GL report addressing how to prevent maritime accidents in the Arctic. For cruise ships, that included enhanced damage stability, collision-resistant hulls and lifeboats better suited to the Arctic. For bulk carriers, the comrecommended hovercraft lifeboats enabling mobility over both water and ice and checks on the ice strengthening to ensure that it matches the actual ice conditions are important measures to manage the

ICC holds food security/education workshop in Nome

The Inuit Circumpolar Council Alaska held two workshops in Nome this week, addressing food security and education. The food security workshop hosted one traditional knowledge representative from each community in the region to evaluate information on food security, the definition thereof and how food security is impacted by climate change and other environmental changes. The workshop is part of an ongoing ICC Alaska project titled "Alaska Arctic Food Security: Building a Conceptual Framework on how to assess food security from an Inuit perspective.'

Project manager Caroline Behe explained that the traditional knowledge holders have been elected by their tribal councils to evaluate information that has been gathered through interviews in villages. "This workshop is one step in a huge project," she said.

'People around the world are drawn to our state's beauty and culture, and our tourism industry made a $3.9 billion impact last year alone but I believe we can still do more," said Murkowski.

Last year, nearly 2 million visitors came to Alaska.

Brand USA is funded by international visitors and private contributions - not U.S. taxpayers. Half of its budget comes from the private sector through cash and in-kind contributions. Councilman Jerald Brown, who voted for the tariff passage, used his option to motion for reconsideration. On taking another look, the Council members did amend the tariff to delete a raise in wharfage rates on fuel and cargo, but retained the five percent raise on other activities.

In other business the Council approved a resolution awarding the Richard Foster Building site preparation and utility placement to Ridge Contracting, Inc. for a low bid amount of $1,353,000. Other bids received were from Pro West, $1,941,500; Sunland Development, $1,950,000; and ASRC/SKW Eskimos, $2,833,500.

The engineer's estimate for the job was $1,528,139, meaning Ridge left about $175,000 "on the table." Councilman Stan Andersen asked City administrators if they thought Ridge could do the job for a bid that low Ridge could do the job, City Engineer John Blees, via phone, told the Council. Ridge had equipment in Nome from state jobs, saving the company money on setting up.

"I wish I had you on record," Andersen replied.

There is money in the budget for unexpected problems arising at the site, including money for contaminated soil removal and clean soil replacement, according to Blees. The RFB site at the north end of Steadman Street has underground and above ground fuel tanks to be removed.

"This work is right up Ridge's alley—tank yanking and remediation," Blees said.

The Council also passed a resolution approving extension of Tom Moran's job as City clerk by one year. Under terms of the contract amendment, Moran's yearly rate goes from $69,000 to $79,000. Personal leave accrual increases from 15 hours a month to 17.5 hours.

In John K. Handeland's report to the Council on Nome Joint Utility System, of which he is manager, held dramatic news.

First, sales of kilowatts has fallen, reducing revenue for NJUS; the utility sold around 29,000 to 30,000 megawatts over the past year, compared to healthy years when consumer demand was for 35,000 to 36,000 megawatts. A megawatt equals 1,000 kilowatts. The NJUS Board of Directors was to have a work session concerning the NJUS budget and other matters Tuesday, April 15, followed by a regular board meeting on Thursday. Handeland attributed the loss of revenue to the shutdown of Rock Creek Mine, the old hospital going offline, consumers using more efficient lighting and radio stations going to modern technology, among other reasons.

The Council set the Board of Equalization date for May 7, at 5:30 p.m. through May 9, as necessary to hear grievances and requests for adjustments regarding the 2014 Tax Roll.

The Council made it clear that property owners may write up their property tax assessment protests and submit them to City Hall to be researched and considered before May 7.

Lots of property tax payers are unhappy, Andersen observed, noting that while the mill rate stayed the same at 11 mills, the taxes owed had gone up because property assessments had increased.

The Council authorized EDI/Hyer, architects on the Richard Foster Building, to enter a formal agreement with Public Design for schematic exhibit design services for the RFB, and authorized an additional $37,125 in fees, plus an additional $15,000 for expenses.

Hello, Central!

And finally, the City administration has asked the City's attorney for an opinion on the enforcement should the Council establish an ordinance against using cell phones while driving within Nome's city limits. This is a follow-up to a discussion of a cell phone law that occurred at the March 24 Council meeting when the Council, for the most part, showed tepid concern toward passing such a safety law.

However, the attorney's opinion that a carefully worded ordinance could work out, the opinion did not clear trouble on the line or improve the bad reception of the idea for Council members. Andersen, however, came through loud and clear.

"I'm still not in favor of it," said Andersen, who two weeks ago said there were already too many laws telling people what to do.

"On the other side, I am," Councilman Jerald Brown said.

"The legislature didn't do anything. No other city in Alaska has anything. Why do we have to be out front on it?" Andersen responded.

going to go through.

"Maybe we will have to wait until you are not running for Council any more," Brown told Andersen. "Would need to have two agreeable," Brown said, figuring strategy.

Sparks hit redial.

"Î hate to see it fail for lack of effort. Stepping out in front is not too bad," Sparks said. Find another partner and let 'er rip, Andersen told Brown.

"Studies show talking on the phone while driving is more dangerous and being in less control than being over the legal limit for alcohol," Brown said. "With all the kids in the streets, no sidewalks, parks, it is just a matter of time."

According to a memorandum from Charles Cacciola, between state law and the ordinance Nome is considering, only hands-free devices that operate through the vehicle's speaker system would be permissible, not the more common earpiece type.

"We believe this is not fatal to a hand-held ban because drivers would have the option of using a vehiclebased system ..." said Cacciola in his memorandum. "We believe that a carefully drafted ordinance, supported by adequate factual findings, prohibiting the use of hand-held phones while driving is enforceable under Alaska law."

told UPI that Arctic nations have decided to open their waters to exploration and her company aims to develop those reserves responsibly.

Last week, the U.S. Coast Guard published a 152-page report on Shell's operations in Alaska. Shell's drillship Kulluk struck ground off the Alaskan coast in 2012, and the Coast

The Kulluk's grounding off the Alaskan coast followed a 2012 exploration season in the Arctic waters of Alaska that was complicated by equipment failures. The company in January said it was suspending its ef-

Savoonga lands first spring whale

By Diana Haecker

On April 6, Savoonga whaling captain Carl Pelowook Jr. of Savoonga and his crew landed a 27-ft. male bowhead whale. The spring hunt began April 1. Starting mid-March, whaling captains hauled their boats and camp equipment to the Southwest part of St. Lawrence Island, reported whaling captain George Noongwook.

Noongwook also said that the sea ice this spring was bad and often pushed out by winds.

However, the past three weeks have been cold and weather allowed hunters to launch their boats off the shorefast ice. Pelowook Jr. and his crew were about five miles offshore when they caught what is known as an "Ingutuq" whale, a plump young male.

Other whaling captains and their crews went to assist Pelowook and his crew to bring in the whale. "It made a lot of people very happy," said Noongwook.

He added that Savoonga whaling crews will attempt to land six whales in the springtime and save two for the fall hunt.

St. Lawrence Island has a quota of 16 whale strikes, split evenly between the communities of Gambell and Savoonga.

Two pilots killed in airplane crash near Bethel

By Diana Haecker

The remains of two pilots were found in a crashed Hageland aircraft after the plane went down approximately 30 miles southeast of Bethel last week. Alaska State Troopers reported they were notified on April 8 at 6:15 p.m. that an aircraft was overdue in the vicinity of Three Step Mountain.

The aircraft, a Cessna 208 Caravan, operated by Hageland Aviation under the brand name Ravn Air Group, was on a training flight with two people aboard. They were pilots Derrick Cedars, 42 of Bethel, and Greggory McGee, 46 of Anchorage.

The burned wreckage was spotted near Three Step Mountain near a fishing weir.

The Alaska Army Guard in Bethel dispatched a Blackhawk helicopter with local fire personnel and Alaska State Troopers on board to respond to the crash site in an attempt to locate survivors.

When troopers observed a large debris field and the willows around the crash site were burned and charred. The remains of the pilots were in the wreckage.

Troopers recovered the bodies from the crash site on April 10.

Next of kin for the pilots have been notified.

The National Transportation Safety Board has been notified and is investigating the crash, aided by the Federal Aviation Administration.

On Nov. 29, 2013 a Hageland Aviation Cessna 208 crashed near the village of St. Mary's.

Four people were killed and six were injured in that crash.

School District faces possible cuts to pre-k education

Bv Kristine McRae

The Nome Board of Education met for their regular meeting last Tuesday to continue discussions about next year's budget which, given the uncertainty of the state's funding commitment to education, is proving tricky for local planning. Nome's Superintendent of Schools Steve Gast updated the board on current legislative status. "It looks like there will be a fairly substantial increase in the BSA [base student allocation], but it's also difficult to get a read on what they're going to do about the one-time funding monies, which could effect the BSA. We have to wait until the end of the session," Gast said.

The uncertainty has several community members concerned about rumored funding cuts to the pre-k teacher position at the Nome Preschool. The grant funding, which provides for two certified teachers at the pre-k level, is in jeopardy while funds from the state legislature have yet to be assigned. The district currently funds three pre-k teachers, one at the preschool through general funds and two at Head Start through the state grant. "They cut 28 percent out of the grant," Gast explained, "which is essentially one position."

Rebecca Callahan, director of the Nome Preschool and parent of five Nome Public Schools students, advocated that the board maintain the position of a certified teacher at the preschool. "The preschool would really like to stay in the partnership with the district. We work closely with Head Start, and we've become a common group of all the preschool kids in Nome. The kids need a stable preschool education to be ready for kindergarten," Callahan told the board. Several parents echoed Callahan's sentiment and for some, the preschool is especially important because their children don't qualify for Head Start.

At last month's school board

tified teachers at Head Start, shared overwhelmingly positive data about the success of pre-kindergarten education for Nome's kids. Currently the three-year-old program at the preschool has 26 children and the fouryear-old program has 16. Head Start doesn't have a three-year-old program, but has 40 students in the fouryear-old program.

Marsha Sloan of Nome Eskimo Community shared that 17 tribal members attend the preschool, some of whom did not qualify for Head Start, and others who are in the threeyear-old program. "Ten percent of kids going into kindergarten don't get any services," Sloan told the board, "Having the certified teacher has really strengthened the program and really helped the kids be kindergarten ready. We want to support and to help find a solution so they don't lose the teacher." One option would be to place a certified teacher at each of the pre-k schools, as was originally intended by the grant. Board members are also considering making cuts in other personnel positions in order to maintain funding for the

Both the elementary school and Nome-Beltz Jr./Sr. High are exploring new math curriculums that would align student learning to the Core standards. Committees made up of teachers, parents, and community members have been researching new programs. The prospect of spending money for new materials has met some speculation, though. Nome resident Pat Booth told the board that the new programs seem to be much like existing ones. "It looks like the program is over thinking math," Booth said. "Maybe we could get the current program up to par, rather than get another one." Superintendent Gast responded that the present curriculum doesn't meet the Core standards. "We have to find a new curriculum that has the information the kids are going to be tested on," Gast said.

District Technology Director Robin Johnson explained the large jump in technology costs for the upcoming school year. "We need to replace the high school laptops," Johnson told the board, "and we have to do them all at once so that the students can access their stuff from any computer on the server." Johnson has proposed 80 new student laptops and 15 teacher computers. She also said the existing high school computers would find a home at the elementary

Nome-Beltz teacher Susanne Thomas introduced visiting multidisciplinary artist Jimmy Riordon, who is visiting Beltz as part of the Artist in Residence program. "This is our first artist in residence," Thomas told members of the board, "and we had support from ACSA, Northwest Campus and Nome Public Schools to bring him here." Riordon is a bookmaker by trade, and he is working with up to 30 students at a time constructing hand-made books. "Many, many kids are passing through those two [English] classrooms throughout the day," Riordon said, "They are focused, and kept up. Kids were engaged." He is also planning to make screen prints with the students. He brought along some innovative and cost effective equipment including a portable pasta press which, Riordan said, "works just as well as an expensive press, and it can stay here

Thomas has been advocating for a stand-alone art program at Beltz for some time. Believing that art can have a positive influence on overall academic achievement, she attended the art curriculum development program in Anchorage and met art teachers from other districts. "It would be beneficial to continue the art program on its own," Thomas told the board, "and that's only really possible if we have another teacher position. Everybody can find a way to express themselves."

Lisa Leeper of Anvil City Science Academy presented fellow teacher Teresa Gartung with the district's Partner in Education award for her volunteer work with the kindergartners' music program. Gartung uses her own time to travel to the elementary school to sing with the kids. Over the past few years Gartung has led the kindergartners in such spring musicals as Sing into Spring and Goldie and the Bears. "One parent said she is the epitome of what the power of music looks like in a child," Leeper told the board and audience.

Nome-Beltz Junior High teacher Hana Jones presented the middle school student of the month to Terri Ruud. "Terri is described by her teachers as enthusiastic, positive, and encouraging," Jones told the board, "She cares about her work and she cares about others, and she has grown by leaps and bounds." The board will meet again for a work session on April 29.

KAWERAK REGIONAL CONFERENCE— This year's Kawerak conference theme was "Living our traditional values today & tomorrow." The conference kicked off on April 8 and ended on April 10.

future and the future of her culture. "I felt I need to protect that vision of my elders, I was worried about where our future is going and that time is running out," she said. This urgency was overwhelming, but in the end she concluded, "We've been here for 10,000 years, so time is on our side." She called for action and gave as an example an Inupiaq Language Immersion school in Kotzebue. "They started with a run down building and $100 in donations for supplies," she said. "Once we have prioritized what to focus on, we don't need bureaucracy or funding for it. We need to move forward and learn how to get out of the way," Medicine Crow said.

In closing she showed three videos produced by First Alaskans Institute that depicted the lives of Native peoples in Alaska dealing with the aftermath of historic trauma and a call to action to overcome negative influences of the past. This includes insisting on the right to vote and to be educated to make good choices.

"The thing that drives me is that when I pass, I want to be able to say that I helped my people," Medicine Crow ended her address.

Baring the soul

While Medicine Crow touched on the historical trauma of a western culture swooping into Alaska and dramatically changing the lives of the Native peoples, Colleen "Yaari" Walker of St. Lawrence Island spoke about how her own life was traumatized by having to live in two worlds, domestic violence and self-medicating through alcohol. "When I found myself in Eagle River's Hiland Mountain Correctional Center for my second DUI, I decided to write a book about my experience and I titled it Behind Black Walls," she said.

Walker is from Savoonga, St. Lawrence Island. She spoke Siberian Yupik before English and was immersed in a subsistence life in her community prior to moving to Anchorage. She works at the Alaska Native Heritage Center and also is a school counselor for 200 at risk middle school students in the Anchorage School District. But she hit rock bottom after being arrested for drunk driving.

During her time in Hiland Mtn. Correctional, she began recording the daily routine in a place that was reigned by despair, disrespect and disregard for humane treatment of people. She took the punishment because she realized that driving while intoxicated was horrible and that she was lucky that she didn't hurt or kill anybody. But then matters got worse when she received news of a suicide in the family while she was incarcerated and she couldn't be with them in the time of mourning. Remembering the tragedy, Walker paused, cried silently and then went on to speak about the good that came out of writing her book. Not only did she process her own pain, but also wrote about other women who found themselves behind those black walls. "When inmates learned that I was writing a book, they came to me and shared their stories," Walker said.

Alcohol is at the root of many tragic stories and Walker said she can't stay quiet about the evil it's doing any longer. "I am embarrassed to say that I was ashamed of myself. So alcohol became my best friend. I didn't want to admit that I was an alcoholic, but I was drinking five to six days a week, having only two hours of sleep at night and then going to work," she said. "My 14-year-old son pleaded with me to quit, but I didn't listen. When I made up my mind to quit, I apologized to him that I haven't been the mother to him that he needed."

She said writing the book helped her process the alcoholism, the domestic violence, the horrors of jail. "My journey of healing is just beginning. It is overwhelming and painful to see how many of our people struggle with alcohol. We can't stay quiet. If we stay quiet, how do we teach our children to stay healthy?" she asked.

She added that she mustered her strength to quit for her children. "We lost too many people to alcohol and suicide, a lot of them happened under the influence of alcohol. Nothing good comes out of alcohol. It causes problems among friends, family and ruins your finances."

The audience listened quietly to Walker's frank presentation and when she was finished, an outpouring of comments reflected that Walker is not alone with her suffering. "It's time for us to make some changes," Walker called for action.

Sea change

Climate change and the changes it brings to the Alaskan northern waters is a topic that has risen to the front burner of national attention. While the Bering Strait and the Arctic is the garden for Native hunters and subsistence gatherers, pressure is mounting to use the strait as a passageway for ship traffic in increasingly ice-free summers and to explore for fossil fuels in the Chukchi and Beaufort seas. In addition, the modern day gold rush in Nome has brought concerns to the forefront for subsistence fishermen and women.

Inuit Circumpolar Council Alaska president Jim Stotts informed the audience of an ICC project that aims to assess food security from the Native perspective.

A closed workshop on the topic took place on Monday and Tuesday with representatives from the Bering Strait region. Premise of the study is that climate and cultural changes are factors that stress traditional food gathering, hunting and harvesting in the region.

The study aims to identify how Alaska Native communities define food security and insecurity.

The ICC is a permanent participant at the Arctic Council. Stotts said that changes occurring in the Arctic can seem overwhelming at times and that people need to stay engaged with the forces that shape the region's future. "As the United States administration begins to implement their Arctic Strategy, they ask us for input. I think it's important that we give it to them. Stay engaged," said

UAF Marine Advisory Program agent Gay Sheffield updated the audience on new and unusual occurrences that were reported in the past few years. Sheffield also put it in the context of food security since most marine mammals and animals she talked about are also a food source for Bering Strait residents.

She noted a major event this winter: after a week of thawing and unusually warm weather in the region, the thermometer reached 51°F on January 27.

Sheffield reported evidence of whale entanglements in ropes, of packing bands found around a sea lion's and a seal's neck.

In one slide of her presentation, she showed a scar on a whale that was likely inflicted by a boat pro-

As part of the stranded marine mammal network, Sheffield takes reports and keeps count of washed up dead marine mammals in the region. Last year, nine dead whales washed up on beaches in the region, including Nome, near Kotzebue, Wales, St. Lawrence Island and Goodnews Bay.

"As shipping increases, we should know what's normal in terms of dead marine mammals washing ashore," she said

Sheffield also noted that a rare whale washed ashore near Gambell. It was a rare Stejneger's Beaked whale, a species that has never been seen this far north.

Scientists don't know much about the species, but that they are deep divers. The whale died presumably from a great change in pressure by surfacing too fast, an indication that the whale was driven from the depths to the surface to escape a loud sound.

At the same time, Sheffield heard reports of a beached beaked whale in Adak and two dead beaked whales beached in Valdez.

Sheffield gave an update on the still unknown seal disease that caused a federal probe into an "unusual mortality event" of ice seals seen across the Arctic with hair loss, weeping sores and lethargic behav-

"After all this testing has been done, we still do not understand what happened in 2011," Sheffield said.

Only four seals were tested for radiation and none showed elevated levels. In 2013, Sheffield received reports of ten spotted seals, nine ringed seals and eight bearded seals that showed hair loss and healing sores.

Another first came last year when dead birds littered beaches at St. Lawrence Island. Scientists found that the avian cholera killed between 6,000 and 38,000 birds. This was the first time that avian cholera was reported to have killed migratory birds in Alaska. Kawerak Subsistence Director Brandon Ahmasuk said that the Fish and Wildlife Service plans to conduct an extensive bird carcass cleanup mission at St. Lawrence Is-

In December 2013 another occurrence of oiled birds was reported in Gambell. The US Coast Guard responded and flew out to St. Lawrence Island to try to find the source of the oil, but could not find

This marks the second time in two years that oiled wildlife were found near the island, with no result on the source that soiled the animals.

Ouestions and comments from the audience dealt with fears of what is to come and how it will affect the fish and marine mammals that nourish the region. Sheffield reminded the audience that not much monitoring is being done in the area. "I recommend to be aware and vigilant and to communicate when you see things out of the ordinary," she said.

A question from the audience spoke to the conflict that has risen between ocean-going gold dredgers at Fort Davis and subsistence fishermen and women. Kawerak's Social Science Director Julie Raymond-Yakoubian confirmed that she had received several reports of conflict between subsistence users and gold dredgers. "We also heard concerns of turbidity and of dumping of human waste into the ocean," she said. A request to put funding towards a detailed assessment of offshore mining to the Dept. of Health and Human Services was denied.

Other concerns dealt with the impact of more icebreakers in the region, the effects of climate change and what can be done. Stotts said that climate change is a runaway situation. "It cannot be solved at the local level, it needs to be solved at the global level," Stotts said.

A new feature at the conference was a clicker that allowed instant audience surveys. One of the questions raised was "How dependent is your household on subsistence re-Thirty-seven percent sources?" clicked that 51-75 percent of their diet is subsistence food. "Do you think increased shipping will benefit your community?" Forty-seven percent of the audience said yes

The conference ended with a reindeer stew feast, potluck and tribute to longtime Kawerak board member Patrick Omiak from Little Diomede. Dancing resumed with all dance groups performing late into the night.

Easter Eggs: A healthy holiday food

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Easter eggs are thought to be an early Christian adaptation of an ancient Zoroastrian custom of decorating eggs in the spring as a way of celebrating new birth and new life. But should eggs be considered a symbol of health?

Some experts view eggs in general, and Easter eggs in particular, as a possible health hazard. Each Easter various health departments warn of Salmonella poisoning and an increased risk of heart. disease from consuming this holiday favorite. Why the same agencies do not issue similar warnings regarding the harmful health effects of substitute Easter egg candies, marshmallow rabbits, and milk chocolates is beyond the scope of this article.

It turns out that the ancients were right: eggs are good for you. Modern research proves that eggs are a compact, easy-to-prepare, whole food likely to improve memory, help eyesight, and lead to weight loss.

Eggs spent several decades on an often-misunderstood list of foods that may cause heart disease because eggs are loaded with cholesterol, and it is known that certain forms of cholesterol in the blood stream are associated with a higher risk of cardiovascular disease.

Fortunately for egg lovers, research shows that eggs do not raise the risk of heart disease for most people. In 1999, the Journal of the American Medical Association published an important study of 120,000 men and women showing that consumption of up to seven eggs a week does not increase the risk of heart disease or stroke in otherwise healthy people. The only increase in risk was ALASKA seen in patients with FAMILY diabetes. Various DOCTOR studies since then show that eggs may cause an increase in overall cholesterol in about 30 percent of people. This may sound alarming, but the increase occurs in both "good" (HDL) and "bad" (LDL) cholesterol so that the overall risk of heart disease remains unchanged.

Cholesterol may be the most infamous component of eggs. But from a health point of view, the average egg, at only 71 calories, has a long list of vitamins, minerals, and nutrients that promotes overall wellbeing.

The typical large egg has 6 grams of protein and 3.5 grams of healthy unsaturated fats. The fat-soluble vitamins A, D, E, and K are concentrated in eggs. Eggs are also a good source of B vitamins, zinc, iron, and Eggs are also a rich source of choline, an essential nutrient thought to improve memory and support healthy muscle function.

Interestingly, egg consumption may also provide one of the secrets to weight loss. Eating eggs causes a person to feel full longer. In a 2005 study published in the Journal of the American College of Nutrition, researchers found that subjects who consumed two eggs for breakfast felt full longer and ate less over the next 36 hours compared to others who ate a bagel-based breakfast with the same number of calories. Subsequent research by these scientists showed that people who consumed eggs for breakfast lost 65 percent more weight and maintained a higher level of energy compared to those who ate a bagel-based breakfast with the same number of calories.

Of course, these benefits do not extend to the bacon, sausage, hash browns, or other sources of saturated fat typically prepared with eggs. But it does not take long to acquire a taste for eggs with a healthy mix of Alaska, but they are often disregarded. The Three Friends dredge is making handsome profits, and affords an example to the organizers of companies intending to dig for gold in river-bottoms.

The dredge has turned over the bed of the Solomon River, making successive piles of debris that look like the furrows of a giant plowman. Even a casual glance shows that this reject is not all gravel, but fragmentary rock. On most of the 70 acres that have been over-turned the bedrock is schist, but where the dredge was at work last August the gravel lay on limestone, into which the buckets bit courageously. Indeed, it was remarkable how this Bucyrus machine dug into the weathered limestone of the riverbottom, bringing up chunks of white rock that looked as if they had passed through a rock-breaker. It is astonishing what work a modern dredge will accomplish.

Under the guidance of Mr. Leland we went on board the dredge and watched the operations, which, although familiar, are always interesting. Each bucket holds five cubic feet, the spacing of the buckets and the speed of their travel being such as to give the dredge an actual daily capacity of 3,500 cubic yards. The gravel yields about 50 cents' worth of gold per yard, at a cost of 18 cents. As the gravel and two feet of the limestone on which it lay, were brought up by the buckets, they discharged upon a tabular shaking screen, 24 feet long and 15 feet wide; this screen-table is made of steel-plate punched with holes, through which the fine stuff, including the gold, is washed by the play of strong jets of water. The boulders and other refuse proceed to the rear of the dredge, where they are rejected, while the screened material is washed over a series of riffles, arranged in three tiers, to arrest the gold. Mr. Leland was kind enough to stop the dredge, so that by aid of the electric light we could see the gold nesting under the riffles—and it is always pleasant to see gold thus, not so much as the expression of wealth but as the evidence of skill in extracting it from places that seem a little beyond the reach of man.

Saying it Sincerly

By Rev. Karen Sonray, Our Savior Lutheran Church Member, Nome Ministerial Association

Father if you are willing take this cup from me; yet not my will, but yours be done. (Matthew 26:39)

How do you pray for those close to you (your children, grandchild, spouse friend)?

A. Do you pray that they would have life filled with all good things; with peace and comfort; with joy and laughter and with safety and security? OR B. That they would have a life filled with real experiences, challenges and struggles, with tears and new awareness, with excitement and danger? I know when I pray I do tend toward option A most of the time. But when I stop and think about the things that have taught me the most about my faith, relationships and life, I realize that I should be praying closer to option B.

Praying for a better life seems to imply always praying for a safe life with only good things. Option B is a hard prayer, but it too is important. We have to admit that sometimes mission and purpose outweigh safety.

In our innermost heart and mind, we know that the things that are easy in life don't actually give us the best life. And since we know that, why don't we pray for our loved ones to have the fullest, most purposeful and challenging lives that they could possibly have?

This throws us straight into Jesus' experience in the garden:

• Father if you are willing take this cup from me; yet not my will, but yours be done.

This prayer opens our lives up to the possibility that God knows best; that somewhere in the future and in our life, God will deliver life to us in a way that fills us up, teaches us and makes us incredible faith-filled creatures!

And isn't that what we really want for our children and loved ones? Purposeful and faith filled lives? May you pray and may you remember to pray not only for safety and comfort but also for challenge and purpose!

Governor Parnell signs legislation supporting medical professionals

April 8, 2014, Juneau, Alaska – Governor Sean Parnell today signed legislation to support medical professionals who volunteer their services, including those participating in the Alaska Mission of Mercy (AKMOM) event on April 11 and 12 in Anchorage. House Bill 269 is sponsored by Representative Steve Thompson.

"I appreciate Representative Thompson's work to pass HB 269," Governor Parnell said. "By allowing medical professionals who volunteer their services in the state to be covered under Alaska's civil immunities law, Alaskans will benefit – especially those attending the inaugural Alaska Mission of Mercy event. I also extend my gratitude to the many volunteers who give their time and expertise to such a worthy cause."

The legislation amends the Volunteer Health Care Provider Act, which offers state-licensed health care providers who volunteer health care services immunity from civil liability. HB 269 extends these same provisions to out-of-state providers who hold courtesy temporary licenses. The bill ensures volunteers from out of state have the same protections as in-state providers.

Specifically, HB 269 will help clear up liability concerns surrounding the upcoming Alaska Mission of Mercy event organized by the Alaska Dental Society. The program provides free dental care to residents who would not otherwise have access.

vention activities. The council also serves as the central coordinator for related services throughout the State.

"Over this past year, more than 9,300 people sought services at domestic violence and rape crisis centers. About 75-percent were victims of domestic violence, 20-percent victims of sexual assault, three-percent victims of stalking, and 13-percent victims of other violent crimes," said Senator Meyer. "This council provides those critical services as well as working to reduce those incredibly heartbreaking numbers of violence against

The passage of SB124 is another piece in the Senate's efforts to combat Alaska's high rates of domestic violence and sexual assault. On March 28, the Senate unanimously passed Senate Concurrent Resolution 20, sponsored by the Senate Finance Committee, which proclaims April 2014 as Sexual Assault Awareness Month. SCR20 is now being considered by the House State Affairs Committee.

Koch Brothers behind attacks on public education

Koch Brothers' front groups ALEC and AFP attacking public education system

ANCHORAGE: New reports reveal the shadowy, Kochfunded organizations Americans for Prosperity and ALEC are pushing a one-size-fits-all set of anti-public education policies in multiple states including Alaska. In Alaska and other states, Koch-backed groups are attacking common core education standards, undermining teacher tenure, and pushing vouchers that would spend public money on private schools.

'The Koch Brothers aren't just trying to buy Alaska's Senate seat—they're also going after Alaska's students and teachers,' said Mike Wenstrup, Chair of the Alaska Democratic Party.

Koch Brothers' Anti-Education Agenda:

 Cutting Funding: The Koch Brothers are supporting teacher layoffs in Alaska, urging the legislature not to restore lost Base Student Allocation funding. In contrast, Democratic elected officials have introduced bills and offered amendments that would restore classroom education funding to prevent teacher layoffs.

• Firing teachers: The Koch-Brothers' organization Americans for Prosperity - which has spent over $1 million on attack ads in Alaska—is pushing to have teachers fired more easily and without review. Democratic legislators have opposed firing teachers and introduced legislation to strengthen retirement security in order to retain good teachers.

Vouchers: In Alaska, Texas, Arkansas, and other states, the Koch Brothers are pushing voucher schemes that would send public money to private schools. Democratic and several Republican legislators have opposed vouchers.

North Pole City Council rejects Koch attempt to dodge sulfolane cleanup

Alaskans demand Koch Brothers clean up pollution that is contaminating drinking water

ANCHORAGE: The North Pole City Council voted unanimously in support of forcing the Koch Brothers to clean up sulfolane pollution that is contaminating drinking water. The City Council is fighting back against the Kochs' efforts to leave North Pole with polluted drinking water after the Kochs shut down the Flint Hills refinery.

The Kochs Brothers' closure of the refinery and attempt to dodge cleanup responsibility has been widely criticized by Republicans, Democrats, and even by a Koch Brothers front group that apparently was unaware the Kochs owned Flint Hills.

"The Koch Brothers are buying yet another round of attack ads right after shuttering the refinery, and they're trying to escape their cleanup responsibilities," said Fairbanks resident Mike Wenstrup, Chair of the Alaska Democratic Party. "The Koch Brothers shouldn't be able to leave contaminated drinking water in addition to their legacy of lost jobs.'

While Alaskans are fighting to make the Koch Brothers clean up their mess, the Kochs are buying more attack ads against Senator Begich, even after previous Koch ads were slammed for a Maryland actress posing as an Alaskan and for their false claims. The Kochs have spent more than $1.5 million in attack ads already

During the last campaign cycle, the Koch Brothers raised $400 million for attack ads and fake "grassroots" organizations designed to influence elections. This cycle, the Kochs are spending money seven times faster, and are dumping money into the "Alaska Chapter" of Americans for Prosperity.

Legislature passes unprecedented bill invading women's privacy SB 49 puts politicians between women & doctors, requires disclosure of private medical conditions

ANCHORAGE: The state legislature has passed legislation (SB 49) allowing politicians to dictate what constitutes a "medically necessary' abortion, and to force women to disclose personal medical information to the government. No other medical procedure requires such an invasion of personal privacy, and pending litigation suggests the regulation likely will be found unconstitutional. Republicans passed this bill after eliminating provisions that would have encouraged family planning, meaning that this unprecedented invasion of privacy probably won't even reduce the number of abortions.

"Republicans in the legislature have declared war on women's privacy and health care. It is profoundly cynical to invade women's medical privacy while rejecting programs that could have reduced the number of abortions," said Kay Brown, Executive Director of the Alaska Democratic Party.

In what became known as "Alaska's New War on Women." the state legislature attacked not just women's privacy but even contraception. Republican Senator Fred Dyson told women to stop drinking "lattes" if they couldn't afford contraception. Republican Senator Pete Kelly said birth control is for women who don't want to "behave responsibly." Senator Coghill spearheaded legislation to define a "medically necessary" abortion and to require women to report their medical conditions to the government, an unprecedented invasion of medical privacy.

Even after being lampooned in the state and national media over their war on birth control," Republicans persisted in invading women's privacy. SB 49 is very similar to regulations passed by Governor Parnell and Lt. Gov. Treadwell that have been put on hold by a judge because they may be a violation of Alaska's Constitution and women's due process rights.

House approves oil and gas property tax change

Nageak's HB379 gives boroughs flexibility in how to use revenues JUNEAU - The Alaska House of Representatives Monday passed a bill that would allow a borough or municipality the opportunity to change how it uses revenues from property taxes collected on oil and gas infrastructure. House Bill 379, by the House Community and Regional Affairs Committee, would leave the current 20 mill rate in place, but change the cap calculation from 225-percent to 375-percent in some in-

C&RA Co-Chair Rep. Ben Nageak said the change would allow the North Slope Borough the opportunity to use revenues for operating costs instead of debt service. "Over the course of the last 34 years, the North Slope Borough has taxed below the state cap, by 1.5 mills. That difference has amounted to about one billion dollars to the State of Alaska. We did so to be a good partner. We provide a whole range of services ourselves, saving the state money while working in conjunction with state agencies. House Bill 379 will allow the Borough to use revenues for operating costs and existing infrastructure, instead of debt service, which has gone down substantially.

HB 379, which passed unanimously, now moves to the Alaska Senate for consideration.

Nome hosts regional music festival

By Sarah Miller

Student musicians from Region 1 convened at Nome-Beltz high school last week for a three-day Music Festival. Participating schools included Bethel, Dillingham, Kotzebue, Unalakleet, and Nome-Beltz, who take turns hosting the festival on a rotating basis. Friday's concert consisted of choir and band performances by individual schools. The music festival included opportunities for students to audition for command performances of both individual and ensemble choral and instrumental pieces, given on Saturday afternoon. Students were also able to audition for an honor band via recorded auditions, performing as a group in Saturday evening's concert.

The music festival included a guest director, Roger Schmidt, director of the Sitka Fine Arts Camp.

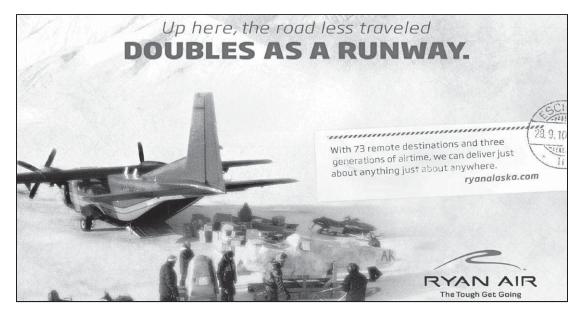

Schmidt taught the massed, honor, and combined bands seven new pieces of music in two days, which they performed at the Saturday evening concert. Schmidt commented that he found the students receptive to the challenge and opportunity to prepare for a concert in a short period of time. "The students were attentive, eager to make music, and willing to take lots of risks and chances with the music. They focused hard and that attitude will take them far," said Schmidt.

The festival also featured a guest choir director, Byron McGilvray, who has a diverse, worldwide background in professional conducting, including 35 years of guest conducting throughout Alaska. McGilvray left the festival early due to illness, and was unable to conduct the choir's Saturday performances. His place was filled by Tammy Vollom-Matturro, who serves as artistic director and conductor of the Kenai Peninsula Orchestra. Vollom-Matturro was the Solo Ensemble Adjudicator in this music festival. Other festival guests included John Damberg, Percussion Specialist from Anchorage, and John Kagerer, Band Instrument Repair Specialist.

Music teacher Ron Horner coordinated the hosting of this year's festival, along with Pat Callahan, Activities Director. Horner thanked the guests for traveling to Nome to share their wisdom with the students, and expressed appreciation for the many individuals who worked behind the scenes to make the festival a positive experience for Region 1 students

Grand jury indicts Adrienne Michels in Wongittilin death

By Sandra L. Medearis

Facing two criminal felony charges in the vehicular death of a pedestrian, a solemn Adrienne Michels, 29, looked straight ahead as she waited in state Superior Court for arraignment April 21.

A grand jury convened on April 17 in Nome and handed up the indictments on manslaughter and failure to render assistance in the April 12 death of Wagner Wongittilin, 54, of

Michels pleaded innocent to the charges

A complaint filed by Nome Police Dept. April 14 also charged Michels with driving under the influence, a misdemeanor, and leaving the scene of an accident involving injury or death, also a misdemeanor, after she struck Wongittilin with her Ford Explorer near the intersection of West Fifth Avenue and Bering Street on April 12.

Wongittilin, known in the local and Native art communities as an excellent carver, died in Norton Sound Regional Hospital shortly after the accident.

Wongittilin served as a volunteer firefighter in his St. Lawrence Island community and also a volunteer first responder.

On April 21, Michels remained in custody under bail set at $50,000 and third party custody required with conditions to be set upon release.

At an April 15 district court arraignment hearing, defense attorney

Myron E. Angstman of Bethel told the court the bail was excessive.

Count I indictment finds sufficient evidence exists for a criminal charge of recklessly causing the death of Wongittilin, a Class A felony.

NJUS utility rates going up

By Sandra L. Medearis

Demand for electricity from Nome's utility is down and creating budget problems, partly due to new technology and efficient use by businesses and the public.

Nome Joint Utility System executives say they cannot find a way to cure a shortfall of $780,000 in electric revenue without boosting water and sewer rates to make these services pay their own way without subsidy from electric sales.

The NJUS board was to vote on a water and sewer service rate increase of 21 percent at its regular meeting April 22.

Unless a funding miracle happens, folks will be flushing and running their faucets to the tune of $16.59 more for water and sewer to residential and $9.88 more for senior rates.

That comes to $199 and $119 a

Add to that a proposed increase in electric rates of $14.15 a month, bringing the increase in kilowatt costs and water-sewer costs to $30.74 for residential and $24.03 for senior rates per month-$368.88 and $288.36 per year.

This was the news after the NJUS board spent around five hours hashing costs and savings possibilities over two work sessions on April 15 and April 17.

The figures don't lie, said John K. Handeland, utility manager.

"Recently we have seen a reduction in electrical demand with the loss of Rock Creek Mine, energy efficiency efforts by government, businesses and individuals, and closure of the old Norton Sound Regional Hospital," Handeland told the NJUS board in presenting a 2014 business

The energy used by the new hospital has helped, Handeland said, but overall he expects a 10 percent reduction in kilowatt sales in 2014, that will translate to the $780,000 reduction. Added to that, cuts to the Governor's Dept. of Environmental Conservation program has removed

ICC tackles food security, education issues in Nome

By Diana Haecker

The Inuit Circumpolar Council-Alaska brought two workshops to Nome last week that engaged regional experts to discuss two different topics: food security and education.

Food security On Monday and Tuesday, food security took center stage at Old St. Joe's Hall. A food security project by ICC Alaska has been ongoing for three years, said ICC-Alaska President James Stotts. "Carolin Behe has been traveling to a number of villages in our four Alaska regions conducting interviews with Traditional Knowledge holders, hunters and community leaders to talk about what food security means from the Inuit perspective," explained Stotts.

The workshop in Nome comes after similar events were held in Barrow and Kotzebue. A workshop in Bethel is planned to happen soon. The workshops follow Behe's travels to 15 villages, including Stebbins, Gambell and Wales in the Bering Strait region. Each tribal council was asked to nominate traditional knowledge holders to provide information for the project. The workshops' purpose is to bring those experts in each region together again to make sure that the information has been correctly summarized and evaluated, explained Behe. After the workshops are done, Behe will be formulating a draft final report, which is then reviewed by the 120 contributing authors and then peer-reviewed before the ICC Alaska board is adopting the final project and its recommenda-

Letters -

Dear Nancy

I live in Brevig Mission. Let's talk about parasites and leeches and believe me it's not about things we can't see and bugs. It is about human beings leeching themselves onto elders and abusing them financially; not just one family member but the whole family...like it is happening to an elder here.

It is not his fault, thinking that he has to take care of them —especially the daughter, but knowing them it won't shame or embarrass them.

To have his neighbors go over "to clean" his house for money— where were they when they gave him bed bugs? They said they cleaned his house twice, what a joke! If they did clean we wouldn't have had to re-clean his house, dirt caked on his counters, table, and dirty dishes in the sink. They expect to be paid because they're so used to it. When he has no money they won't see him. They're just getting money for dope and bingo. He can't say no to them.

The oldest girl is old enough to get a job! (Oh yeah) she had jobs outside of Brevig and still when she needed money he'd send it and no payments were made to pay him back even when he took out her CODs.

Never mind what he needs—like bedding, cooking pots and pans, even a new stove to cook his food, instead of using a skillet. She's the worst parasite I've seen! Her mom gets her late husband's SSI, one who lives with her gets one too, and the rest abuse the elder...

rest abuse the elder...
Well you know what happens to parasites they die when the host dies.
Sincerely,

Signed but name withheld by editor

When will the whining and bellyaching about Obama Care stop? Hey, we have it, we want it. It's about time we get something good. Can't the colossal jerks who sold their souls to the Tea Party stop yammering about it? Could they please stop playing the broken record and move on to something more constructive?

Like an army of carpenter ants they keep hacking away at the Affordable Care Act. The American people are getting fed up with this grinchy, counterproductive nonsense. Even our governor seems to begrudge the Medicaid supplement that would help the poor who are desperate for health care. Why does it seem that the more affluent members of our society are the most vocal about not providing affordable health care?

Many of us can be financially marginalized by a hospital stay. It's not just sticker shock. The expense is mind-blowing. So when we hear the extreme righteous politicians continue to harp on the elimination of Obama Care we have some recourse— we can say "e-nuff" and vote their stingy butts out of office. — N.L.M.—

COUNCIL - A pioneer settlement.

The Ride to Ophir

From: T. A. Rickard, Through the Yukon and Alaska, chapter 34, pages 363-380.

Part II of IV

(A story continued from last week about Rickert's ride on his horse, Tony, to the town of Ophir. Courtesy of the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum)

In the afternoon the weather cleared sufficiently to warrant a start. As Tony was restless, I rode ahead of the party to the road-house on the East Fork of the Solomon river, obtaining directions from Mr. Leland. The trail was easy to follow, for it was mainly in the river. Soon after starting I found that I had to cross the river where the water had been deepened by a dam built by the dredging company; while this ford was not deep enough to compel the horse to swim it made me thoroughly wet, for I had declined the loan of rubberboots as being awkward when riding. On the Seward Peninsula the rubberboot is continually required; everything is wet; the moss is soaking, and even when on horseback the frequent fording of icy-cold streams renders such protection advisable. The roads, for the most part, cling to the river beds, where gravel affords fairly good footing as compared to the soggy tundra; in consequence, the road is in the river, and the river is in the road, making it immaterial whether it be labeled a water-way or a trail.

A series of short trots over the bare gravel and a number of splashes through the stream brought me to a lateral gulch which I recognized, from description, as the one that led to the Big Hurrah mine. This is remarkable as the premier gold-quartz mine on the Peninsula, that is, a mine from which gold-bearing ore was extracted from a quartz lode, as distinguished from the gravel of the placer deposits constituting the source of nearly all the gold won in Northern Alaska. The Big Hurrah was one of the undertakings of that fine old Californian Charles D. Lane. The lode consists of several quartz veins traversing graphitic schist. The quartz is banded with graphite, which hindered amalgamation, although much of the gold was so free as to be visible. Many beautiful specimens came from this mine, and there is no doubt that the erosion of this lode was one of the factors enriching the Solomon River.

Proceeding up the river I saw several derelict dredges of rudimentary design and heard the coughing of the gasoline engine actuating one that was still at work. Tony pricked up his ears and gave signs of dissatisfaction with this asthmatic mechanism, but it was soon passed, like a memory of the crudities that have made the dredging branch of gold mining a nightmare of blunders.

The seven or eight miles were shortly covered; there had never been any danger of losing my way, for the river was a sufficient guide, and on the adjoining hillslope the line of the Council City & Solomon River Railway afforded assurance of the direction to be taken, although it provided no more than that, being only the sign of a dormant system of transportation. No trains puffed along the quiet valley, no whistle broke the heavy silence; the railway was not in operation, because the traffic was inadequate. However, there it was: a

NOAA releases Arctic action plan

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration this week released an action plan to implement six goals in the Arctic: Forecast sea ice, improve weather and water forecasts and warnings; strengthen science to understand Arctic climate and ecosystem changes; improve stewardship and management of ocean and coastal resources in the Arctic; advance resilient and healthy Arctic communities and economies and enhance international and national partnerships.

NOAA's plan is to support the White House's National Strategy for the Arctic and its implementation

The National Strategy's guiding principles are to safeguard peace and stability, make decisions using the best available information, pursue innovative arrangements, and consult and coordinate with Alaska Natives. The implementation plan for the National Strategy was released in January 2014, and it directs federal agencies - including the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration – to take action on a number of critical Arctic issues. Those are to evolve Arctic infrastructure and strategic capabilities, to enhance Arctic domain awareness, to preserve Arctic region freedom of the seas, and to provide for future U.S. energy

NOAAS role is to provide science, service and stewardship to the rapidly changing Arctic, its inhabitants and the nation.

Earthquake shakes Noatak

The Alaska Earthquake Information Center in Fairbanks reported that a magnitude 5.6 earth quake occurred on Friday, April 18 at 10:44 a.m. about 13 miles northeast of

There was no damage reported. AEIC seismologist Natasha Ruppert said it is a notable event for that area to experience an earthquake since there are no known fault lines underneath. "That area has very little seismic activity," said Ruppert. The AEIC recorded 40 aftershocks after the Friday earthquake, the biggest one being 5.3. Ruppert said 1981 saw an earthquake in that area, closer to Red Dog mine, at a magnitude of

GAO issues report on Arctic

The US Government Accountability Office issued a report on key issues related to commercial activity in the Arctic with some conclusions that seem surprising. The GAO was tasked to produce the report because decreased seasonal sea ice continues to open Arctic waters for increased shipping, resource development and mining.

The GAO report says that commercial U.S. Arctic maritime activities are expected to be limited for the next 10 years. The GAO found that shipping companies noted higher costs with Arctic transits, that the cruise industry noted a lack of demand for Arctic cruises from the mainstream cruise consumer base and that the last exploratory drilling for oil happened in 2012.

The report pointed to the need of information infrastructure such as mapping and charting, and search and rescue services. It also mentions the US Corps of Engineers/State of Alaska study and said that the mining industry had identified the lack of an Arctic deepwater port as a contributing factor to limited mining in the Arctic.

Senator Lisa Murkowski responded to the report on and said she appreciates the Government Accountability Office for its focus on the nation's Arctic Maritime Infrastructure needs. "I disagree with the suggestion that our development and activity are not on the rise,' Murkowski said in a statement. 'Given the substantial lack of Arctic infrastructure, now is the time for the United States to invest in its longterm Arctic future."

28th Alaska Legislature goes into overtime

By Diana Haecker

The 28th Alaska Legislature had to go into overtime when both the Senate and House worked past the midnight hour on Easter Sunday to get bills passed.

In what was billed to be a session all about education, it was exactly that bill that is yet to be hammered out and in its wake, the capital budget needs to get passed as well.

Prior to the midnight deadline, the Alaska Legislature approved in Conference Committee a $9.1 billion operating budget on Sunday. The House approved the budget unanimously; in the Senate, the vote was

The budget deficit still will be nearly $1 billion.

The budget sees a $50 million reduction in state agency costs, with education costs still hanging in the air, as well as the $3 billion that will be used to fund public employee and teacher retirement systems in the future. The operating budget invests $9.1 billion in total funds in state services and programs, from road maintenance to K-12 public education funding, deferred maintenance, employee pay and benefits and the University of Alaska System.

"The final budget is made up of $5.8 billion in state general funds, $2 billion in federal funds and $1.3 billion in other funds. Yet to be negotiated increases to education funding will be placed in the capital budget, a House majority press release said.

The annual operating budget is the only item the Alaska Legislature is constitutionally mandated to accomplish. The budget marks a state government cost reduction of 2.2 percent, an equivalent of $51.4 million in unrestricted general funds.

Compromises reached between the House and Senate budgets include $1.5 million for more frontline social workers in the office of children's services. It eliminated $2.7 million for the High School Graduation Qualifying Exam; restored $1.2 million for tobacco prevention and control grants; restored $1.4 million for the Alaska Youth First Program; funded the Bureau of Highway Patrol at $1.65 million and added a $12.5 million contingent appropriation in case UAF's coal-fired power plant fails and diesel power generation is necessary for at least 60 consecutive days, among other changes.

The budget now heads to the Governor for signature.

Arctic infrastructure

Other bills of importance to the region include the passing of the SB 140, a bill to develop Arctic infrastructure such as ports, roads, emergency and telecommunication projects. SB140 creates incentives to attract private investment to build infrastructure. The bill follows some recommendations by the Alaska Arctic Policy Commission.

This bill is the culmination of hundreds of hours of work by the members of the Alaska Arctic Policy Commission," said Senator Lesil McGuire, AAPC co-chair. "As we traveled the state to listen to the people in the communities, the one recurring theme was the need for Arctic infrastructure. This bill sends the message to the Federal Government that we feel fortifying and strengthening our assets in the Arctic is critical and we are not afraid to lead this massive undertaking.'

A charging document filed April 14 said that examination of Michels' cell phone showed no calls had been made on the phone to summon help following the accident.

According to a complaint filed in court based on the investigation and observation by Nome Police Dept. officers Nick Harvey, Joseph Dickerson and Community Service Officer Carl Putman, around 1:14 a.m. April 12, officers found a Ford Explorer standing in the northbound lane with one headlight illuminated and the driver's door open.

Wongittilin lay nearby with visible head injuries, according to accounts in the document.

Nome Volunteer Ambulance Dept. transported Wongittilin to the hospital where he was pronounced dead about an hour later.

The charging document states that Wongittilin's son Homer and Wongittilin's nephew said they were walking north on Bering Street on the sidewalk when they heard a "boom" and saw Wongittilin flying through the air.

The men attempted to do CPR on Wongittilin before officers arrived. They described the driver of the vehicle who they said fled on foot.

At about 1:25 a.m., according to the statement signed by Ofc. Nick Harvey, Eric Osborne arrived with his daughter, Michels, in his truck. Michels told officers she did not see Wongittilin in the roadway prior to her vehicle striking him; she only heard a "boom."

Osborne, according to the complaint filed in court, said he received a call from Michels at approximately 1:10 a.m., who relayed that she had been in a collision and was "all shook up.

Osborne informed police, according to the court document, that he had found Michels at East Tobuk and East E Street and dr her back to the James Goldbeck, a driver for Mr. Kab, observed the accident. He had seen the three individuals walking north on the east side of Bering Street. "James stated with words to the effect that just prior to the collision, he observed Wagner jump in front of the SUV with both hands above his head as if to warn the defendant of pedestrians walking in the area," according to the court-filed complaint.

Goldbeck approached the scene on the west and contacted a female. When he noticed Wongittilin's condition lying in the street, he told the female to call 911. She replied that she did not have a cell phone, according to Goldbeck's account in the police complaint.

Goldbeck went to the police station and reported the collision.

Michel's submitted to one of three Standardized Field Sobriety Tests and was found to be impaired.

Two later breath tests showed readings over the legal limit of alco-

A search warrant allowed examination of the call log in the Michel's cell phone. The examination showed the last outgoing call was made at 8:09 p.m. on April 11; the next outgoing call was made to Osborne at 1:11 a.m., according to the court doc-

Angstman filed a peremptory challenge-no statement of reason required—on April 17 to remove Judge Timothy D. Dooley from the case. However, Angstman agreed Monday to allow Dooley to preside over the arraignment.

The case was transferred from district court to Alaska Superior Court April 17. Most felony cases are handled by the Superior Court. In felony charges, the defendant has a right to have a grand jury decide whether there is enough evidence to charge someone with a crime. The grand jury must convene within 10 days if the defendant is in custody and within 20 days if defendant is not in custody

The Class A felony can draw zero to 20 years and a maximum fine of $250,000. The Class B felony could draw zero to 10 years and a maximum fine of $100,000.

Michels had an arraignment April 15 in district court on the complaint filed by police; she had another arraignment April 21 in Alaska Superior Court based on the felony indictment by the grand jury.

Another hearing is on the court schedule for June 13.

"While we have a few small projects on the table, we are projecting a related $300,000 loss of revenue," Handeland said.

For some years, the sales generated by water-sewer service has not been able to cover cash operating costs or debt service without $300,000 to $400,000 from electric margins coming to the rescue.

NJUS set current electric rates 19 years ago and water-sewer rates 18 years ago and has been able maintain them through cost cutting measures-staff reductions, taking on new customers and rental of equipment to construction projects. However, customers have paid more with the addition of a fuel surcharge.

In 2012 and 2013, NJUS did not charge the full fuel surcharge allowed by the NJUS tariff rules, foregoing about $650,000 in revenues, temporarily offset by mine sales and equipment rental, according to Han-

The board showed reluctance to raise rates as they looked at ways to save. While no vote can be taken during the work sessions, it was apparent that a utility cost increase will be approved at the April 22 meeting. "The more we raise rates, the more people are going to find alternatives or just move away," NJUS board chairwoman Berda Willson observed. "We have to get our house sewer construction contract work. in order before we raise rates.

The utility should get a tight grip on services to be paid for by construction projects, Willson said.

"All the tradeoffs have to be clear and where ongoing projects should pay for services," she said.

Several board members wanted to go through the utility tariff and update it to find ways to save.

"If we can't show the utility breaking even, we are in danger of not receiving grant funds," Handeland reminded the board. "We need to make water and sewer stand on its

Board members gave Handeland a list of work orders to begin to pare

· Check into technology for saving the waste energy going up the stack at the power plant.

•Implement a company truck policy. Currently, according to Handeland, 10 employees take work trucks home, so they can respond to utility emergencies faster. Board members said they saw employees using trucks for non-utility business.

· Get out of the trucked water business. The board asked Handeland to see if NJUS could legally stop providing water to people not hooked up, a chore performed in the utility's stead by Robert Madden, Jr., as a business, with part of the overhead provided by NJUS.

 Check into salvaging copper from the old power plant

• Check traditional relationships between NJUS and some consumers to ensure that everyone is paying their shares and paying according to a uniform scale of charges. "Jumping in to be a nice guy is expensive,' Carl Emmons, board member, said. "It is the ratepayers who are being the nice guys.

• If we're a monopoly, why do we spend money on advertising?" Emmons wanted to know, observing that NJUS contributes to Iditarod and sponsors ballgames on the radio.

• Put effort into actively selling surplus items such as the Case backhoe, perhaps worth perhaps $4,000 to $5,000 to a mining crew, for example.

All these savings are fine, Handeland said, but change would not

"We're not going to generate the difference between the positive column of the revenue stream and $700,000 in the negative column"

The board agreed that unless cuts were made up front, reductions would fade into the background once the rates went up.

Although there were no outward signs of foul play, his body was sent to the medical examiner to determine the cause of death.

FOOD SECURITY (top)— A two-day workshop at Old St. Joe's dealt with the Inuit definition of food security in the light of a quickly changing Arctic. During the education workshop, a lunch consisting of Native foods was served, including bowhead whale from Barrow and Norton Sound salmon.

• ICC

The project is driven by the impacts of a changing climate and industrialization. "This historically dynamic environment is undergoing changes at an unprecedented rate, resulting in an unpredictable environment and an increased vulnerability to the food security of Inuit communities," reads the workshop description.

Stotts said that food security viewed through the Inuit lens is a more complicated issue. "It has a more complicated and broader meaning than what other people across the globe would say food security meant," said Stotts. Behe explained that the project has come up with more than 800 definitions for food security and it can mean anything from assuring environmental health to accessibility. "Accessibility in the western sense translates to purchasing power," explained Behe. "For the Inuit it may mean that there are cultural and regulatory impediments to food security, not knowing how to hunt because there is no transfer of knowledge or not having fuel for the snowgo." Stotts added that having a healthy food security means more than just having a healthy ecosystem. It also means that having management systems in place that help monitor and ensure that the ecosystem stays healthy. "Then there is a whole political question of the management of resources," he said. "It's about our fishing and hunting rights and the management of these resources. Recently the Athabascan regions submitted a proposal at federal level, demanding to manage those resources on their own property. It's more than an environmental issue, it's also a political and control issue."

Behe stresses that the project is led by indigenous people and based on traditional knowledge. She hopes to submit the final report and its recommendations in November 2014. "Part of the initiative is to educate people outside of the Inuit culture about food security seen through the Inuit lens," said Behe. This would apply to federal agencies, the scientific community, resource managers and policy makers.

Education

A separate workshop organized by ICC-Alaska tackled education. Educators and teachers from the Northwest Arctic Borough, the North Slope, Yukon-Kuskokwim and Bering Strait region participated in the two-day gathering, also held at Old St. Joe's.

ICC-Alaska President Jimmy Stotts said in 2010 the ICC General Assembly in Greenland decided to pursue a proposal to hold an international conference on Inuit education. "The purpose was to address what Inuit feel is necessary to have education be successful from an Inuit perspective," said Stotts.

Due to a lack of funding the education conference did not yet happen, but workshops are being conducted to prepare for the education conference that Stotts hopes may happen in the next term of the ICC.

"It's about more than just what goes on in the schools," Stotts said. "It's about learning what it means to be a good Inuk is much more than just school work." For example, he said it is the cultural tradition to learn from one's Elders, to use one's indigenous language at home and to understand proper hunting techniques. "To be successful it is important that we address this on a community level and from a broader perspective," Stotts said.

One day was dedicated to presentations of education systems in Canada and Greenland, to hearing youth panelists and their experiences in education, and hearing round table discussions. The next day, the educators collaborated in pairs and then in small groups and finally as a whole group about the concerns from an individual student standpoint, a community as a whole, and the state in terms of educating Native children.

Nome Elementary School culture teacher Annie Conger was one of the Nome educators who participated.

"We brainstormed each category and wrote the downfalls and how we can improve them. Overall, we wanted our Native children to succeed in their education. We voted on the topics most important and thought of ways we can improve through an individual standpoint, family, community, and state," said Conger.

Conger.

Conger said it was good to work with colleagues from all across the state and to hear what other countries are doing to help their students succeed. She felt inspired by other educators, who, like her, care about their students' success. "What I took from the workshops is that I made friends who have common concerns for their students, ways on how we can work on our language revitalization, and how we can accomplish within a community as a whole, making sure our students succeed in school, and reclaiming their heritage, culture, and most importantly, their Native languages," Conger said.

"We would like for the outside world to understand that education to us is more than just the schools," said Stotts. "It's community effort. We want to reach out to parents. It's no secret that elements of our culture, especially language, is having a hard time now, and we want to change that. We are fighting for our culture."

There will be a report with findings and recommendations to be developed into an implementation plan said Stotts

SB 140 allows the Alaska Industrial Development and Export Authority's to extend the same authority for loans, loan guarantees, bonds and bond guarantees that it currently utilizes in the energy sector.

"This bill gives AIDEA the tools it needs to reach out to the people who are looking to invest in the North. Right now, there is an estimated $100 billion of private capital that is looking for investment opportunities in the Arctic," said Senator McGuire.

McGuire is of the opinion that the bill helps establish Alaska, and by extension the U.S., as a leader in the Arctic. "It positions us to capitalize on the massive new opportunities and challenges coming our way such as shipping, tourism, safety, and responsible resource development," McGuire said.

SB140 now heads to Governor Sean Parnell for his signature.

PERS/TRS

The Legislature passed House Bill 383, making a payment of $3 billion in public retirement debt, which is lowering Alaska's annual payments. "Almost every state is dealing with staggering unfunded liabilities in their state retirement systems," said Senator Pete Kelly (R-Fairbanks). "Unlike those states, we have reserves savings in the bank."

The bill infuses $1 billion into the Public Employee Retirement System and $2 billion into the Teachers Retirement System from the Constitutional Budget Reserve Fund.

The combined unfunded liability is $11.9 billion. The annual pension contributions are the largest cost driver in the state's operating budget. The payment of $3 billion into public retirement debt will reduce average annual payments down to $369 million over the next 10 years.

Governor Sean Parnell praised the Legislature for passing the legislation. "The Alaska Legislature took a bold step in joining me to fix one of the biggest drains on our budget," Governor Parnell said. "Today's action by the Legislature means future generations of Alaskans will not be saddled with this debt and retirees can be confident their pension remains a promise."

The bill sets the framework and allows for the transfer of $1 billion into the Public Employees' Retirement System and $2 billion into the Teachers' Retirement System from the Constitutional Budget Reserve Fund. This $3 billion infusion is expected to come from the capital budget.

Gasline legislation

The Legislature also passed legislation to build a large-diameter Alaska natural gas pipeline. The project will now move into the Pre-Front End Engineering and Design phase to refine the cost and engineering aspects of the project. The bill affirms the commercial agreement signed by the state, the Alaska

Gasline Development Corporation, the producers and TransCanada to advance the Alaska Liquid Natural Gas Project.

According to House Speaker Mike Chenault's sponsorship statement, HB 4 gives AGDC the authority and resources to develop, finance and operate a 500 million cubic feet per day gas pipeline from the North Slope, serving Fairbanks and Southcentral, at the lowest possible cost, without delay. "While pursuing this project, AGDC is structured to be responsive if alternatives materialize that provide greater benefit to Alaskans, including potential partnership with industry on a large-diameter export pipeline. Finally, HB 4 enables AGDC to consider future pipelines that extend the benefits of natural gas to more Alaskans. AGDC is also to pursue a smaller diameter in-state gas line," Chenault wrote. The title of the bill reads: "An Act relating to the Alaska Gasline Development Corporation; establishing the Âlaska Gasline Development Corporation as an independent public corporation of the state; establishing and relating to the in-state natural gas pipeline fund; making certain information provided to or by the Alaska Gasline Development Corporation and its subsidiaries exempt from inspection as a public record...

State subsidies to refineries

Before going into overtime, the Alaska Senate approved a bill to give subsidies up to $10 million of state assistance per year to any refinery operating in Alaska without any showing of need.

The refineries Petro Star, owned by the Arctic Slope Regional Corp., and Tesoro would profit from the law for five years.

House Bill 287 is titled, "An Act relating to the determination of the royalty received by the state on oil production refined or processed in the state; providing tax credits for qualified infrastructure expenditures for in-state refineries; approving and ratifying the sale of royalty oil by the State of Alaska to Tesoro Corporation and Tesoro Refining and Marketing Company LLC; and providing for an effective date."

The 40 percent tax credit would be paid in the form of refunded taxes or cash payments to the companies in exchange for "infrastructure expenditures" at the Petro Star refineries in North Pole and Valdez and the Tesoro refinery in Kenai.

The recent news of the shutdown of the Fairbanks Flint Hill refinery instigated the bill. Petro Star requested the financial aid plan because of high-priced North Slope oil. The House passed the bill last week. It went through the Senate approval in the wee-hours of Monday morning with a 14-6 vote.

Democrats Hollis French, Johnny Ellis, Berta Gardner and Bill Wielechowski opposed the bill, as did Republicans Mike Dunleavy and Anna Fairclough.

Democratic Senators Bill Wiele-chowski (D-Anchorage), Hollis French (D-Anchorage) and Berta Gardner (D-Anchorage) offered a series of amendments to House Bill 287 to make it more fiscally responsible and fair to Alaskans, according to a press release.

The bill was proposed by the Governor.

Official Native languages

Just after 3 a.m. on Monday morning, the Alaska Legislature approved HB 216, making each of the Native languages in Alaska an official language of the state. The Alaska Senate voted 18-2 to approve the measure today in front of dozens of supporters. A spontaneous grassroots sit-in at the Capitol involved over 100 people. It started at noon and lasted until 3 a.m. The measure has had tremendous public support throughout the process, including rare applause from supporters in both the Senate and House galleries and impromptu celebrations in the Capitol hallways as the bill moved through the committee process.

"In this late hour, on the night of Easter, we are excited to bear witness to the Alaska Senate passing this history-making bill to officially recognize our Alaska Native languages in the state they were birthed in," said Elizabeth Medicine Crow, CEO of First Alaskans Institute.

The bipartisan legislation is prime sponsored by Representative Jonathan Kreiss-Tomkins (D-Sitka), Representative Charisse Millett (R-Anchorage), Representative Benjamin Nageak (D-Barrow), Representative Bryce Edgmon (D-Dillingham), and Representative Bob Herron (D-Bethel), and had 18 other cosponsors in the House.

In current state law, English is Alaska's only official language. This bill expands the list to include Iñupiaq, Siberian Yupik, Central Alaskan Yup'ik, Alutiiq, Unangax, Dena'ina, Deg Xinag, Holikachuk, Koyukon, Upper Kuskokwim, Gwich'in, Tanana, Upper Tanana, Tanacross, Hän, Ahtna, Eyak, Tlingit, Haida and Tsimshian. Passage of the bill will not require public signs and documents to be printed in multiple languages, and it will create no additional costs to the state.

Ballot initiatives

With the Legislature still in session – as the education bill and the capital bill are yet to be passed three initiatives have been moved from the on the August 19 primary election ballot to the November 4 general election ballot. The three citizen initiatives are: 12BBAY, "An Act providing for protection of Bristol Bay wild salmon and waters within or flowing into the existing 1972 Bristol Bay Fisheries Reserve"; 13PSUM, "An Act to tax and regulate the production, sale, and use of marijuana"; and 13MINW, "An Act increasing the Alaska minimum wage to $8.75 per hour effective January 1, 2015, $9.75 per hour effective January 1, 2016 and thereafter adjusted annually for inflation.'

Barring the passage of substantially similar legislation, all three initiatives will be on the general election ballot. As required by law for initiatives, the Lieutenant Governor's office will convene public hearings in each of the four judicial districts at least 30 days before the election. 13SB21, the referendum to recall last session's oil and gas tax legislation, will still appear on the August 19 primary election ballot as Proposition 1

RECOGNIZED FOR HER EFFORTS — Bonnie Hahn and NEST shelter monitor, Delia Oozevaseuk, who submitted comments for Bonnie's nomination and also attended the Full Lives Conference.

Bonnie Hahn receives outstanding service award for work at NEST

By Sue Steinacher

Anyone involved with the NEST Shelter knows that shelter manager, Bonnie Hahn, is the heart and soul of the place. Now a lot more Alaskans know it. On April 17, in front of a packed ballroom at the Sheraton Hotel in Anchorage, the Alaska Alliance for Direct Service Careers presented Bonnie with the Outstanding Direct Service Professional of the Year Award for her work in the area of chronic alcoholism/substance abuse. Four other Alaskans in attendance at the Full Lives Conference received awards for their work with people with traumatic brain injuries, mental illness. Alzheimer's/dementia, and developmental disabilities.

As NEST Shelter Manager, Bonnie's responsibilities include opening the shelter nightly, supervising and mentoring the shelter monitors, keeping the shelves stocked with food and supplies, and working directly with the guests to provide a safe and supportive environment for those in need. She typically goes way beyond the call of duty, often on her own time, accompanying guests to medical and other appointments, advocating on their behalf, providing rides to the airport and other destinations, and most important, just being a supportive and non-judgmental friend.

Bonnie was nominated for the award by NEST staff and shelter guests. One staff member wrote,

"Bonnie has singlehandedly raised her own family, the disabled and disadvantaged children of others, her grandchildren and her great-grandchildren. And now the NEST guests, too often disregarded by others, are also Bonnie's family.'

Another co-worker included the observation that, "Bonnie is a very understanding, caring, patient and compassionate person, who treats all people equally." And one of the shelter guests wrote, "Bonnie Hahn puts others before herself. She does so much for everyone. Bless her heart!" From the applause Bonnie received from the conference attendees, it was clear that those just getting to know Bonnie couldn't have agreed more.

Registered dietitian nutritionists: When food is your best medicine

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

It is happening faster now. The Food and Drug Administration approves over 30 new medications each year. Many of these novel drugs are now coming from the FDA with a description that goes some-thing like this: "this medication works in addition to diet...

Thus far in 2014 one out of every three medications approved by the FDA has included this phrase about diet in the drug's description.

For example, the very first medication approved in 2014, called Farxiga (try asking your doctor for that with a straight face), has this official description: "To improve glycemic control, in addition to diet..., in adults with type 2 diabetes.

Note that the medication is secondary to the diet. The cure for diabetes, and many other chronic diseases for that matter, begins not at the doctor's office, but at the din-

The ancients recognized this principle. Hippocrates taught, "Let thy food be thy medicine and thy medicine be thy food."

But where do you turn in a modern era for guidance on diet? The Internet certainly provides a wealth of information. But web-based guidance is often impersonal and the information can be contradictory.

Doctors refer patients to Registered Dietitian Nutritionists for personalized professional prevention of many diseases related to the diet.

Medical nutrition therapy is used: to prevent diabetes; to ALASKA lower the risk of heart disease and stroke; to improve pregnancy out-DOCTOR comes; to increase athletic performance; to promote weight loss (or

Nome youth celebrate the spirit of NYO

By Sarah Miller

The Nome Native Games Extravaganza took place on Friday and Saturday at the elementary school gym. Events kicked off with an opening ceremony of traditional native singing and dancing. Students entered the gym carrying a wooden pole carved into the shape of an eagle, suspending from its beak the NYO Spirit Ball. The athletes are given a ribbon with their name on it to hang on one of the tiers of the Spirit Ball, depending on how far they progress in the games.

Students and community members of all ages were welcome to participate in traditional events including the One Foot High Kick, Leg Wrestling, and the Kneel Jump. More advanced events were reserved for students on the grade school and middle/high school teams. The Native Youth Olympics teams are coached by Hank Irelan and Marjorie Tahbone. Irelan has coached for the past 11 years, and Tahbone is a former Arctic Winter games medalist, WEIO medalist and Native Youth Olympics medalist.

The games' open participation format allowed students to compete against a diverse pool of athletes while also determining which students would be representing Nome in individual events at the NYO Games in Anchorage next weekend. Nome students will compete in several events at the games, including those mentioned above, as well as Scissor Broad Jump, Eskimo Stick Pull, Indian Stick Pull, Toe Kick, One Arm Reach, Alaskan High Kick, Wrist Carry, Two Foot High Kick, and Seal Hop. Judges for the Extravaganza included famous former Olympians such as David Thomas from Palmer, a Congressional NYO Athlete, as well as Nome residents Boogles Johnson and Mariorie Tahbone.

Irelan, in his 11 years of coaching for NYO, speaks of the multiple benefits students gain from participating in the games. "First and foremost, the games are an incentive for academic advancement," he wrote in an email, explaining that participation in the extracurricular team requires maintaining grades and focusing on academic growth.

The health benefits of the training and practices are a benefit as well. Irelan said, "I hope to instill good healthy exercise habits and training for a lifetime of exercise. I love the philosophy of the Native games in which everyone helps one another even in intense competition. The better your competition, the better vou are. I want to instill the idea that work, practice, and dedication make improvement. We measure each event so that students can set specific goals, work toward them, and measure their progress."

While students may find themselves particularly skilled in an individual event, Irelan doesn't allow them to specialize. Students are required to practice and compete in each of the ten events. "Each game is designed to improve and supplement every other game," explained Irelan. "The most forbidden word is

Senior Andrea Irrigoo, who has been participating in the NYO Games for four years, commented, "I have fun participating in the games, but it's also good for me. It's different from all other sports - it's competition against myself, it's different kinds of workouts, and it's a fun activity to do against different people. I find joy and health in competing. It helps me challenge myself in school, in music, in self-discipline."

The NYO season commences with practices beginning in December and January. Junior NYO students have a statewide competition in January, while the senior state competition is the last week in April, an event that is sanctioned by the Cook Inlet Tribal Council. CITC considers NYO a year-round program; however, the school district does not sponsor coaches and practices until Irelan's practice regimen is a twohour daily routine beginning with focus and breathing drills, followed by light aerobics and stretching. Three days a week are the heavy practice days with 30 minutes of intense drills at 30-second intervals. Students drill in each event, because at home meets, each student will compete in each event. When participating in away meets, competition in the events is limited.

Events are divided by gender, with some being single elimination and others, such as the Indian Stick Pull and Eskimo Stick Pull, as double elimination. Seeding for these events is done at random, rather than by weight class. In the Toe Kick, One Arm Reach, Alaska High Kick and the One and Two Foot High Kick events, athletes are given three tries to qualify for competition. During the competition, the height or distance of these events is increased at intervals until the athletes can go no higher or further.

The events in the NYO Games evolved from traditional village and inter-village gatherings, in which people would entertain one another by competing in events that drew upon the physical skills necessary to survive in Alaska's harsh landscape. They were the traditional physical education program for Native youth, useful for maintaining physical strength, stamina, balance, agility, and cooperation.

While some events had individuals competing against one another, the main focus of competition was to challenge oneself. The games also provided youth with an opportunity to exhibit their physical skills to village elders and hunting leaders, who would be looking for future crewmembers.

According to the World Eskimo-Indian Olympics website, certain events, such as the One- and Two-Foot High Kick, served a traditional purpose in earlier times. For example, a single high kick into the air might have been a visual signal from a hunter to the village members that an animal has been harvested or is nearby, alerting the village members to prepare to assist. The Two Foot High Kick may have been a signal that a whale was killed and help from village members was needed to bring it ashore. The Kneel Jump, in which students swing their arms to propel themselves from a kneeling to a standing position without losing balance, evolved from the speed, agility, and balance required to hop across sea ice bobbing up and down in the Tina Fey's oft-repeated quote, "I can see Russia from my house!" was an actuality last week for 120 Bering Strait School District student-athletes who met on the shores of the Bering Sea in windy Gambell for the 29th Annual Native Youth Olympics tournament.

With the graduation of three-time "Athlete of the Year" winners, Stuart Towarak (Unalakleet) and Tahnee Esparza (Golovin) the door was open for new stars to shine and shine they

The Native Youth Olympic games are comprised of 10 events, all derived from indigenous competitions that built strength and agility or celebrated special accomplishments. They are a mixture of power, endurance and brute strength so there are opportunities for students of all ages and sizes to excel. It is open to all students from grade 7 through grade 12.

The tournament opened with the relatively new Indian Stick Pull that mimics the grasping of a slippery fish. It has become a more pleasing event with the ability to more actively push, pull, wiggle and twist the greased stick. The kicking competitions brought the crowd to the edge of their seats as the athletes soared to incredible heights. Early on it was obvious that the Gambell fans were familiar with the events and vocal in their support of their local heroes. Lead amongst that group was the Kneel Jump world record holder Apaay Campbell who is a remarkable all-around athlete and quickly established herself as a prime candidate for the "Most Outstanding" award.

The second day of competition was marked with many strong performances, most notably Campbell's dynamic leap to a BSSD record in the Kneel Jump. She was just a little shy of her World Record and expectations will be high as she heads to State. The Toe Kick had repeat champions in Cameron Okbaok (Teller) and Jonisha Wilson (Unalakleet) and Unalakleet's Aucha Johnson exploded with three gold medals in the three high kick events of the day (Alaskan, 2 foot and 1 foot). The evening was capped with a wonderful celebration of culture with the very popular blanket toss and Es-

The final two events on the final day are dissimilar, in general the big, broad-shouldered athletes dominate the Eskimo Stick Pull and the smaller, lean kids excel at the Seal Hop. It was no different this year as repeat winners from Teller, James Isabelle and Jazzlyn Garnie (smaller but powerful) dominated the competition. Unalakleet's Johnson repeated in the Seal Hop, going almost twice as far as his nearest competition and youngster Marilyn Moore (Golovin) outlasted more experienced hoppers to win her division.

There has never been a tighter race for the top team award as Unalakleet rode the performance of their male Seal hoppers to squeak past the Teller Aklaqs by a single point for the team title. The same was true in the boys "Most Outstanding Athlete" award as Johnson's gold in the Seal Hop was enough to break a tie with Okbaok. Campbell's overall excellence (medals in 7 of 10 events) was enough to edge Garnie, who had similar versatility.

The BSSD team heads to Anchorage with high hopes and anticipation for the State NYO Championships at the Dena'ina Center, April 24-26.

Students are supported in the financial requirements to travel to competitions by a variety of individuals and organizations in Nome. The school district is usually able to fund travel for two individuals, so community members are important to making the NYO Games possible for

Nome youth. Sitnasuak is currently the largest supporter. Over the years, Eskimo Community, CHARR, Nome Discovery Tours, and individuals including Alice Rogoff and Rob Luce have contributed to the travel expenses as well. Irelan commented, "Many state tournaments would not happen without their support."

Irelan encourages community members to come to home NYO events, and to support the youth who are participating in these games. "The games are important. They distinguish Alaska from all other states. They keep the old time Alaska memories alive, and they are also significantly valuable today."

The nutrition facts panel: Linking health to food

By Kendra Miller, MPH, RDN, LD

Miller Health Consulting, LLC

Determining what foods are healthy and nutritious can be a challenge. In 1990, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) helped make health decisions easier for consumers by requiring a black and white Nutrition Facts panel on many of the foods we eat. The panel was originally intended to link a person's health to the food in their diet. With recent scientific advances in healthcare, changes were due to take place.

This past February, the FDA proposed changes to the current Nutrition Facts panel in effort to align with current health research and public food consumption. New target ranges for heart disease and diabetes spurred the initiative and guided new standards. In addition, public food consumption in a single sitting has increased since the original introduction of serving sizes. The FDA now intends to cite what people actually eat and update the nutrient recommendations currently found on the Nutrition Facts panel.

As consumers, it is important for us to understand how changes to the panel can help us make health conscious decisions. The most visible change is the format. The "calories" will be larger and more noticeable. Along with calories, serving size and Percent Daily value will be emphasized in order to draw awareness to their effects on obesity and diabetes. Using the Nutrition Facts panel to reduce daily consumption of these items can potentially lower the incidence of these chronic diseases.

A food item's "serving size" will be updated to reflect amounts typically consumed. This will not identify what people are recommended to eat, but simply what could be consumed in a single sitting. For items that can be consumed in multiple sittings, there will be a "dual column" stating the amount "per serving" and "per package." The dual column could help eliminate confusion people have regarding the actual nutrient intake of their food and beverages.

In reference to the 2010 Dietary Guidelines, we will see a new category of "added sugars" to the therapy is covered by health insurance. And for good reason, healthy changes in the diet may stave off very expensive medical problems. Even for those who are not insured, MNT makes good financial sense.

So do not be surprised when your doctor refers you to a dietitian or a nutritionist. This may just be one of the most important referrals he or she could make in support of your health panel. Research shows the U.S. population is consuming too much added sugar; this is an approach to reduce that amount. Evaluation post implementation will determine whether or not the addition is effective at reducing added sugar levels among the total population.

Requirements for Vitamins A and C will be replaced with data for potassium and Vitamin D. Population averages for potassium and Vitamin D are low. As consumers we then have the opportunity to better monitor foods that affect blood pressure and bone health when these nutrients are listed.

Daily Values will be revised for sodium, dietary fiber, and Vitamin D. The Daily Values column should be updated to reflect current recommendations for such items. The new numbers will reference current nutrient recommendations from the Institute of Medicine. "Total fat," "saturated fat," and after Ella's birth, Mrs. Noonooruk died from complications. Winton and Carrie Weyapuk were contacted and they adopted Ella. Ella died peacefully at home on February 28,

She was raised in Wales, attended grade school there and attended high school in Chemawa, Oregon. After high school she met and married Ron Lathim; they adopted their one and only child Ronnie May Lathim. Ella was blessed with five grandchildren. She and Ron eventually separated. Later on in life she met Ken Adkisson who she lived with until her passing. Ella and Ken were very fond of their numerous pet dogs over the years and their pets always had unusual and comical names. Ella had a love for her house dogs and happily walked them throughout Nome.

Ella was employed in Nome as a housekeeper at the Polaris Hotel for many years. As well, Ella was always generous in lending a helping hand for her family and friends and had a soft spot for her niece Lucy May Kitchen and for her brothers Walter and Louie Weyapuk's chil-

She cheerfully greeted people and was always friendly to people she knew or just met, she never forgot a name or acquaintance. She enjoyed attending the annual Kingikmuit Dance Festival since its inception and looked forward to participating as long as her health permitted her to. She loved to play bingo at the

Solid Green Bingo Hall, as well, she enjoyed "winning on iGGituks!"

Ella always looked forward to the fall harvest of Wales clams that washed up annually. She loved her tipshuqs, miziiGaqs and ung-maluukuks. "Oh my, don't forget my naGunuaqs!" and finally "Ah heck, just send what-ever you can!" This was always a quote she used every fall to her Wales family and "please send freight collect," "You betcha!" was always a lasting expression of

She was respectful and generous to anyone she got to know. Ella loved to kunuukowroq in her Kinigan (Inupiaq) dialect with her friends and family. Her first cousin Mrs. Esther Bourdon recalls, calling her younger cousin Ella to get the right pronunciation of words spoken in their dialect. Ella thought of family and friends in Wales and called often to ask how they were, requesting prayers for everyone in the region. She would always call her nieces and nephews by their Inupiaq names instead of the English names.

Ella is survived by her long-time companion Ken Adkisson of Nome, her only daughter Ronnie May Walling (Xander Koehler) her older sister Maggie Komonaseak and brother Winton "Spuk" Weyapuk and her biological siblings on the Nunooruk's side, her grandchildren: Tiffany Janelle Kristina Nicole Lathim, Kelsie Renee' Walling, Samantha Korrine Walling and Drew Brady Walling, numerous nieces and nephews, great nieces and great nephews as well as great-great nieces and nephews and one great-greatgreat nephew. She was preceded in death by her birth parents as well as her dad and mom, the late Winton and Carrie Weyapuk, siblings; Herbert, Martin, Harry, Isaac, Emma, Walter, Illene, Amos, Louis Johnson

The late favorite first cousin of Ella's was Harriet Simpson (Tevuk). They were very close since they could remember. Even through adulthood they never forgot each other during special holidays and their birthdays, they both had a genuine care, love and affection for each other. Ironically, Harriet died prior to Ella - two months to the day! Harriet passed the late evening of 12/28/13 and Ella the early morning hours of 02/28/14. They are resting in the comfort of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Ella had a special place in her heart welcoming Louie and Leeann Green's son Michael Green and asked to give him one of his Inupiaq names - Iyolook after her late brother. When she thought of her late brother Walter Weyapuk she would say she had her own İyolook!

"trans fat" will continue to be listed; however, "calories from fat" will be eliminated from the Nutrition Facts panel. Research has shown it is not the amount of fat that is of most importance but the type of fat. Unfortunately, there are currently no propositions to substitute saturated fat with values for omega-3 or omega-6 fatty acids leaving it up to the consumer to decipher what foods contain these healthier fats.

The changes proposed are the first major changes since 2006 when "trans fat" was added to the label. The FDA is accepting public comment on the proposal for a total of 90 days. In the next few months, we can expect to hear more on the future changes to the food we eat.

Although these are major changes to the food industry and today's consumers, it is important to note that the healthiest decisions we can make do not require a list of data. Food in its most natural form does not warrant a Nutrition Facts panel. To put this into practice, it is healthier for us to eat an orange rather than drink a glass of orange juice. In the common instance when we are unable to consume food in its natural form, using the Nutrition Facts panel can help us make healthier decisions for our families and ourselves.

thread linking the desolate foreground to a radiant distance, connecting this lone land with home. I liked to see it.

Meanwhile Tony maintained a steady trot and when the trail passed under the railway bridge I found myself close to a group of buildings which I knew must be the roadhouse. So it proved. Getting rid of my wet clothes and borrowing some commodious slippers, I was soon toasting beside the hot stove, while waiting for my friends, who arrived half an hour later. We fared well that night.

Of course, road-houses vary. Fortunately, I did not sample many of them while in Alaska. Sheets are not provided; instead, the traveler wraps himself in blankets used by his predecessors, and it is only the fatigue following exercise in a cold bracing air that enables him to overcome the anticipation of attack from various forms of insect life.

In the morning the traveler is invited to "take a shot" before breakfast; this pre-prandial drink being offered by the proprietor as a courtesy. It is also customary for the bartender to invite the habitués of the establishment, or those who have patronized the place on the preceding night, to take a drink before breakfast at the expense of "the house." It is a villainous custom and creates a vicious habit. Men get so used to it that they cannot eat their breakfast without alcoholic stimulus, or, as Dr. Wiley would phrase it, surprising the expanse of expectant pepsin with a flood of ardent alcohol. We needed no such stimulant. We felt like eupeptic heroes.

The food served was excellent, for this road-house was managed by a clean thrifty woman. The raspberries from the neighboring moor and the fish from the river were both delicious. Even if the eggs were overdue that did not matter, for we were used to 'case' eggs; in fact, one of my friends at Dawson told me that he had become so accustomed to the ripe rich flavor of case eggs that when he went home and his mother took pains to have perfectly fresh eggs served at breakfast on the morning following his arrival, he complained that they were insipid!

Eggs intended for mining camps and other distant places are packed in sectionalized cardboard boxes, each egg being in a separate partition, and 30 dozen in one 'case.' In order to preserve such eggs they undergo treatment previous to being packed, the essential feature of all the various methods being exclusion of air. In the old days eggs were buried in salt and kept in a cool place.

Nowadays eggs intended for transport are immersed in a solution of water-glass or in lime-water; the first of these is a soluble silicate of soda, while the second is ordinary unslaked lime in water. By this treatment the decay is retarded and in a cold country they keep for a long time; the freshest egg eaten at Nome must have been laid five months, while the age of the oldest a polite man would no more care to guess than the years of an old maid. Even the eggs that seem but unhatched chickens are palatable to hungry

THE NOME NUGGET

MUSHING IN CHUKOTKA (top)— Chuck Schaeffer drives his nine dogs on a trail in Chukotka during the Nadezhda Hope Sled Dog Race. Schaeffer traveled with four other western mushers to the Far East to participate in a sled dog race that has been run since 1991. Schaeffer placed third in the event.

DAILY WORKOUT (left) — Schaeffer tends to the first task at hand when arriving in a village during the Nadezhda Hope race: chopping walrus into chunks to be cooked for his dog team. A local took pity on him and gifted Schaeffer with a Russian-made ax, getting the lighter American-made version in exchange. Unlike races in Alaska, where drop bags with dog food, gear and musher supplies are sent to checkpoints, the mushers traveled from village to village and were supplied with a portion of a frozen walrus. Schaeffer said he could communicate by hand gestures and very few english words with locals and in the process made a good friend who helped him cut up walrus.

Alaskan places third in Nadezhda Hope Sled Dog Race

By Diana Haecker

Kotzebue musher Chuck Schaeffer and four other "western" mushers with their dog teams returned last week from Chukotka.

They participated in the 400-mile Nadezhda "Hope" sled dog race along the Chukotkan coast – just on the other side of the Bering Strait and yet a world apart from Alaska. Chuck Schaeffer had traveled with teammates from Beringia Racing, Norwegian musher Joar Leifseth Ulsom and Chukotka musher Timofei Gynutegin of Lorino, Russia, as well as Alaskan mushers Miriam Osredkar and Yvonne Dabakk.

The five mushers were competing with 22 Chukotkan dog drivers, who raced with their working Chukchi dogs traditionally used to transport bunters Leifseth Ulsom won the race. Second was Yvonne Dåbakk, originally from Germany, now living with her Norwegian husband Kenneth Dåbakk in Fairbanks. She conducts postdoctoral studies at UAF and has a PhD in Plasma and Space Physics from the University of Oslo.

Chuck Schaeffer took third place, but participating in the Hope race was for Schaeffer not about placing or racing. "It was my interest to see the country and how it operated. Now I have some idea," he said.

Staying at the National Park Service bunkhouse in Nome after their return from Provideniya via Bering Air on Friday April 18, the mushers had both their heads and computer memories full of images and impressions, but they were visibly relieved to be back in a country where life is somewhat more predictable and less dependent on the moods of Russian bureaucrats or government officials.

Schaeffer said he is still incredulous of the extent of government control in every day life. "It's so different and far fetched from being in America," he said. "The government controls everything."

He said hunters are paid by the government to hunt what would be considered subsistence species on this side of the Bering Strait.

The hunters bring back their harvest, and after it is processed, the government sells it back to them. Schaeffer said the government controls the amount of ammunition in people's possession and everything that is owned or done.

He saw seals sitting out on the sea ice and nobody going out there to hunt them.

In conversation with locals he found out that it would not cross anybody's mind to harvest a seal if the government has not allowed the hunt.

"They don't do it because the government would find out and then they're in trouble," Schaeffer said. But overall, he said, it seems that people are happy and gave the visiting mushers the royal treatment.

Because the dog race was run in a stage-stop format, the mushers got to stay overnight in the villages where host families went out of their way to share what they had and made the guests feel welcome and comfortable.

Upon arrival at Provideniya, the five mushers were held up for a day because custom procedures were more tedious than anticipated. This delayed their journey to the start line, which was 100-some miles north at Loring.

Mikhail Telpin, who in 2013 ran the Yukon Quest and Iditarod sled dog races in Alaska, picked them up from Provideniya and escorted the convoy on a long trek by dog team to Lorino. Schaeffer said traveling was hard because of a brutal ground storm that resulted in frost bitten dogs. Also, they had hoped to give their dogs a 24-hour rest before the race start, but their arrival was only 12 hours prior to the race.

The race took the 27 dog teams from Lorino to Nova Chaplino, Provideniya, then back north to Yanrakynnot, to Lavrentiya, Uelen, Ichoun, and back south to the finish line at Lavrentiya. While Alaska didn't see much snow this winter, there was plenty of snow on the other side of the Bering Strait.

Once mushers arrived in the village checkpoints, they had their work cut out for them. Instead of digging into drop bags – as is custom in Alaskan distance races – each musher was provided with a hunk of walrus meat.

"We spend about two and a half hours each day chopping walrus into chunks for our dogs," said Schaeffer.

The mushers then fired up their cookers, melted water and cooked the meat for their dogs.

Schaeffer observed that the Chukchi mushers fed their dogs raw walrus.

"They cut off a chunk of walrus and fed it to them just like that. The dogs looked like they didn't even chew it. They swallowed and were done with it," Schaeffer said. "The mushers were just as hardy. They traveled with a reindeer skin, their cooker and an ax. Our sleds were packed full of gear for like two weeks of camping," Schaeffer described

Most of the dogs wore homemade harnesses designed to let the dogs pull with their chest rather than their backs. "Their dogs are furry and stout; they hardly required any maintenance," Schaeffer said.

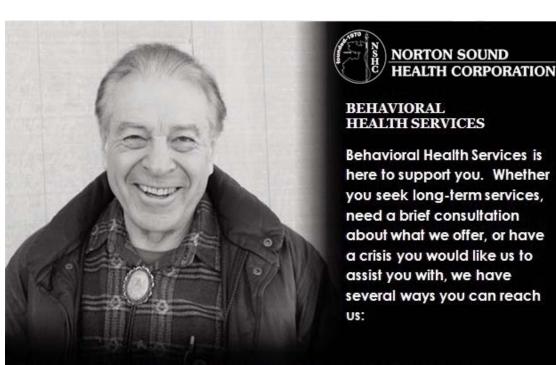

Once the mushers arrived in the villages, there were treated to food and Eskimo dancing and evening entertainment. "Seeing the people, the villages, it kind of blew my mind for a while, and it's probably still in some blown proportion because I couldn't fathom the government controlling everything those people do," Schaeffer summed up.

Although the language barrier didn't allow for in-depth conversations, Schaeffer said that he made some friends, who helped him chop walrus.

One person felt sorry for Schaeffer whacking at the walrus chunk with a rather small American-made ax and traded him for a more substantial Russian version of the tool.

Schaeffer said he cherishes that ax and all the memories he made from dog racing in Chukotka, but he also said that the word "freedom" has a whole new meaning to him.

EPA fines Alaska Gold for hazardous waste violations

By Diana Haecker

More than a year after NovaGold Resources Inc. pulled out of Nome, leaving broken promises and hazardous waste behind, Alaska Gold Company, now owned by Bering Straits Native Corporation, has to pay $72,000 in fines after reaching a settlement agreement with the Environmental Protection Agency. "Poor hazardous waste handling at facilities can leave a toxic legacy of pollution and lead to costly clean up," said Ed Kowalski, director of EPA's Enforcement and Compliance office in Seattle. "In this case, numerous containers of hazardous waste were abandoned and illegally stored — in some cases for several years without the necessary permits.'

The EPA announced the settlement on April 24.

BSNC CEO and President Gail Schubert said in an email correspondence with the Nome Nugget that neither BSNC nor AGC were aware of the investigation and the enforcement action until well after the purchase of AGC closed last year.

'AGC cleaned up the problem sites in 2010, which was why the enforcement action was a surprise to both companies," Schubert wrote. She added that Alaska Gold, under new ownership by BSNC, met with EPA staff and engaged in discussions concerning the proposed fine, which resulted in a reduction of the penalty amount.

'This was the first occasion that BSNC has engaged with the EPA, and we found the staff professional and the negotiation process satisfactory. We believe that the settlement amount is fair to both parties," Schu-

In June 2010, EPA inspectors visited the Rock Creek Mine and the Alaska Gold Co. facilities on 115 6th Avenue West in town and found that hazardous waste was stored and not labeled. Count 1 lists the failure to make a hazardous waste determination. The consent agreement and final order reads, "A total of 99 containers of assorted waste types were located in a storage area outside the Sixth Avenue facility's power plant building in containers. At the time of inspection, respondent didn't know the contents of at least 60 of these containers." The containers were filled with spent halogenated solvents and solid waste classified as "ignitable hazardous waste." Also, inspectors found two open 55-gallon drums filled with methanol-containing waste, also highly ignitable, and at least 25 aerosol cans and buckets of paint and other discarded chemicals.

This netted AGC Count 2: Storage of hazardous waste without a permit.

AGC was also in violation for storing and selling used oil. AGC stored used oil at both the Sixth Avenue facility and the Rock Creek mine without clearly labeling the oil, having leaking oil containers and shipping the used oil to town. "Respondent routinely initiated shipments of used oil generated at its Rock Creek mine facility to businesses operating in the Nome, Alaska, area for use as a fuel in oilfired space heaters."

Finally, the EPA found improper releases of used oil at the Rock Creek mine outside the truck shop and warehouse, but "no steps had been taken to stop the release of used

NPD warns about suspicious male

By Diana Haecker

One of the first rules growing up is: Never go with anybody offering you candy. Parents and Nome Police are emphasizing that message as there have been two reports of a man trying to lure kids with candy to follow him home.

NPD are looking for a white male adult with long hair and an unkempt beard. The first report of the suspicious male came on March 23 when a mother reported that she was at the AC store when she was approached by a suspicious male, asking her to bring her children to his house for some candy. She described him having a beard, pony tail, being approximately 5"5, wearing a grey jacket and black snow pants.

NPD officer Andrew Schwartz

wrote in an email to the Nugget that NPD responded immediately, but were unable to find anyone matching the description in the surrounding area and the store.

The second report of similar nature occurred on April 23 at 6:24 pm. The Nome Police Department received a report that a suspicious male had knocked on an apartment door in the 26-Plex on Fifth Avenue, and asked the reporting party's daughter if she wanted to go home with him and have some candy. The daughter slammed the door shut and locked it, until her grandmother came home about 15 minutes later, police say. Police immediately responded and

Council likes utility rate increases Eyes higher booze tax

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council has given preliminary approval to a utility rate hike when the panel voted the corresponding ordinance into first reading April 28. The measure raises rates for water and sewer service by 12.5 percent for residential and senior customers. Commercial customers will see an increase of 17 percent to the minimum rate for metered customers with other compomaking up metered service—meter charge, demand charge and commodity charge. For a smaller metered customer using 5,000 gallons or less, the change would result in a $29 per month additional charge, $10 per month for residential customers and $6.50 per month for seniors.

Current water and sewer service rates have not been updated since 1999, despite the rising costs of operating the utility. Revenue from electrical service has been subsidizing the water and sewer service. However, whereas the demand for electricity was 35 to 36 megawatts annually, it has now fallen to 29 to 30 megawatts, according to John K. Handeland, NJUS manager, and reduced revenue. Therefore, the NJUS board agreed with Handeland that water and sewer services must start to be self-supporting.

The Nome Joint Utility System handed the new rates for water and sewer to the Council for approval after hours of debate by the NJUS board of directors who approved the tariff revisions on April 22

The tariff revision will come up for second reading, public comment and Council debate before a vote on final passage at the next regular Council meeting.

According to Handeland, the reduction in revenue may be attributed to energy efficiency efforts by government, businesses and individuals as well as loss of Rock Creek Mine and closure of the old Norton Sound Regional Hospital. The opening of the new hospital mitigated some losses, but projections say the utility will still see a reduction of eight to 10 percent reduction of kilowatt sales in 2014.

At its April 22 regular meeting, the NJUS board decided to increase the fuel surcharge for electric service by just a tad more than two cents per kilowatt-hour. With reduction in kilowatt sales and loss of equipment rental opportunities, NJUS needed to raise the surcharge to the full tariff rate, according to Handeland.

In other business, the Council voted the 2014 NJUS operations and maintenance budget into first reading. The budget document shows revenues of $13.6 million and O and M expenses of $13.2 million, including provisions for depreciation in the amount of $5.087 million, leaving a net cash margin of

Dear Editor: "LIARS AND HYPOCRITES?"

It has become more than apparent that certain factions of our government have become infested with liars, thieves and hypocrites, at least in my opinion! And any time that politicians make laws or set strict guidelines for the people that they represent to follow, but have no intention of adhering to them personally, then those misguided fools have become a grave danger to the lawabiding population of our great nation, a disgrace to Our Founding Fathers, and a toxin in the body of democracy!

And when a group of people (any people) silently and obediently accept the self-serving actions of those who blatantly violate their oaths to God and Country, do you really believe that it will just end there?

"Our government is there to serve, and not to be served." And if this has ceased to be an axiom of justice and freedom, then the mandates of Our Forefathers, the blood of patriots for nearly 240 years, and our sweat, toil and love of country, along with the unswerving dedication of countless millions of true and dedicated Americans, is being diluted by the hypocrisy of those who came to pillage, and not to build upon our great-

Contrary to what some would have us believe, it is still "We the People" and not the people's elected representatives, who are the true masters of these United States of America!

Industrial Accidents Happen

Alaskans can learn a lesson from the folks in Charleston, West Virginia. The residents of that city awakened one morning in January to the pungent smell or licorice in the air and a bad taste in their drinking water. A chemical called 4-methylcyclohexane methanol, used to wash coal before it is burned, spilled from ruptured storage tanks into the river. It was a mystery chemical with its effect on humans unknown. Industrial accidents happen, and usually at the expense of the residents who live near by and downstream.

Alaskans must never allow what happened in our sister state to happen to us. West Virginia allowed their politicians to systematically pull the teeth of their environmental protection laws. Their legislators bowed to the influence of big mining — coal. Other states have bowed to the political pressures of big oil. Everyone wants to jump onboard the fracking train. What's in the fracking mud? Corporate secrets? Kerosene? Radioisotopes? How do folks protect their vital drinking water from the greed of industry? Alaskans have seen our legislators try to short-circuit the permitting process. They call it "streamlining" but it's just a faster way to make a buck. We are bombarded with political ads bad-mouthing the Environmental Protection Administration and spiels by legislators who push a steady effort to undermine environmental laws.

In WVA they have systematically weakened all the water quality standards that apply to the coal industry. We won't let that happen in rural Alaska because we have educated young leaders with a backbone who are not afraid to stand up to big industry. We know we must not flaunt careless industrial practices in the face of Mother Natureshe can be so very unforgiving. Alaskans must not lose our vigilance in our state and federal efforts to protect the beauty of where we live. —N.L.M.—

Is it possible to conclude that criticism of Obamacare cannot be controlled? Is that due to the fact that you and the mainstream media that do his bidding have slipped into irrelevance? People demand the truth so they have turned to the internet for it. Nancy Pelosi said, "You'll just have to pass the legislation to see what's in it." So, you'll just have to be patient as this obamination spews forth more evidence of socialist incompetence and lies. You never told us what to expect. Our legislators never did because they didn't even read it. Now people are beginning to die as their care has been given to bean counters.

It's called "taxation without representation." We went to war over it

Here's what will probably happen. Since a ratio of 54 percent to 29 percent of Independent voters support anti-Obamacare candidates, it's possible we may get a major change next fall. It would probably be more fitting to refer to you and your plight instead of we and us. I find more connection with the Tea Party day by day. Another staple article of food is condensed milk; as to that it is safe to say that good condensed milk is more wholesome than most of the milk sold in cities; certainly, the miner gets to like it, especially with his coffee, and he adds it to the wild raspberries and blueberries with gusto. Habit is second nature.

Leaving the East Fork next morning we crossed the divide separating the watersheds of the Solomon and Fox rivers. At noon we halted at Hatch's cabin on I.X.L. Creek. Etiquette in Alaska, or elsewhere, requires that if you use another man's cooking utensils, you shall clean them after using. Also you shall put at least as much firewood beside the stove as that consumed by your own use. For the rest, the prospector in the North is generous, and in his absence, is not averse to the consumption of his bacon and beans, leaving it to you to return the hospitality when he comes to your 'creek.'

The scenery in this part of the Peninsula is subdued: Low rounded ridges, clad in tundra, are crested with outcrops of schist, of fantastic form, due to accidents of weathering on a rock of tabular structure. As seen through flying veils of mist these isolated rocks took the shape of men and monsters; to the first invaders of the wilderness they must have been uncanny, and to an imagination distorted by hunger or weariness they probably loomed like the figures of a distempered dream. To those who know Otago, in the South Island of New Zealand, I can say that in rock-weathering this part of the Seward Peninsula resembles the ridges near Barewood.

The landscape was not without color, for the first frosts had already touched the foliage; in the valleys the willows and blueberry bushes had the glint of gold, and on the hillsides the imperial purple of autumn was thrown over a wilderness whose furthest rim was silhouetted against a gray sky.

Tony was full of vigor and led the cavalcade. In the stream, repeatedly forded, the trout darted from underneath the hoofs of the horse, while the frightened duck flew in near circles. Finally, leaving Fox Creek I ascended a short rise and found myself on the edge of the Niukluk Valley. A perfectly straight road, about five miles long, stretched across the tundra to Council, a cluster of white buildings on the farther bank of the river. This bit of good road was built by the Road Commission and consists of corduroy, covered with moss and topped with gravel. It connects the trail or water route of the Niukluk with the Solomon River, and has

Is proper vetting of a political candidate the responsibility of a political party or is it a personal responsibility?

By Gail Phillips

In spite of the fact that Alaska is on equal footing with all other states in the Union regarding the number of representatives we can send to the U.S. Senate, history has shown that we Alaskans and our Alaskan political parties rarely responsibly vet our candidates running for this office. Other states put their candidates for national office through rigorous vetting procedures. We don't seem to.

The original purpose of the political-party system was to provide a forum for like-minded people to adopt a general platform of beliefs, make nominations for elected offices, and support the members of their respective party who are elected to office.

The political parties had the responsibility of vetting candidates who ran for office using the party's title. Unless a candidate could assure the members of the organization that they would be the best candidate to represent that party's ideology, they would not get the endorsement or the party support. Unfortunately, this is no longer the practice.

Today, anyone can run for office, declaring whatever political affiliation they desire. Candidates show up on the scene sporting a good-looking resume, making bold statements and raising large amounts of money. Too often party loyalists become like lap dogs falling in line to support that

In recent years, Republicans have done a disastrous job of responsibly vetting candidates running for state and national office. In 2010 Joe Miller from Fairbanks walked right through the Primary process before any vetting was done regarding his history and campaign rhetoric. A majority of Republicans voted for him and it wasn't until after the Primary election, when countless discrepancies in his record were exposed by the media, did his campaign go into melt-down mode and the Republican nominee lost a historic defeat to a write-in candidate. Responsible vetting by the Party would have prevented all of the turmoil the Republican Party went through that year.

Another case in point was John Lindauer's gubernatorial campaign in 1998. This may have been the saddest example of lack of "quality control" by the Republican Party ever. Mr. Lindauer was a good-looking candidate with a good-looking resume and a fist full of cash. Unfortunately, the powers that be within the party structure didn't vet his candidacy, didn't verify where his money was coming from, and had no means of preventing him for running using the Republican label. Soon after the Primary election, which he won, it was exposed that the money for his campaign wasn't actually his but rather had been illegally transferred to him by his wealthy wife, a Chicago lawyer. Alaskans and Republicans turned against him and of course, the Republicans lost that election. If only the Party had responsibly vetted his candidacy, we wouldn't have gone through the turmoil we endured in that election.

As a life-long Republican, I am only addressing this serious problem in the Republican Party, but over the years I've witnessed the same problems affecting the Democrat Party as

Now – we are four months away from another Primary election. We have to ask ourselves if the Party has responsibly vetted the three candidates who are running on the Republican ticket for the U.S. Senate Race, or are we in for another disastrous surprise following the outcome of the Primary election?

Has the Republican Party addressed all the questions that came up following Joe Miller's last Primary election victory? Has he satisfactorily restored the confidence - or lack thereof – in the Party electorate? Can we now overlook all the negative issues following that election?

Has the Party addressed former Attorney General Dan Sullivan's record on gun control issues? When in 2010, as the State's Attorney General Dan came out against Mark Neuman's 2010 'Stand your Ground Law' saying that it would "encourage unnecessary violence". Do we, as Republicans, not think that Senator Begich will use everything he can, such as this point, to win the Race? While he served as Attorney General, it was revealed that AG Sullivan's prosecutors were reducing charges against convicted sex offenders. His office defended this practice by saying the Department had limited resources and this was not a priority. Has the Party examined Dan's apparent "softness" on issues regarding domestic violence when he was in a position to come down hard on these types of crimes? These are real issues, and without the party doing the legwork on vetting, it seems only appropriate to bring them up now before we must learn about them after the Primary.

As a Republican, I want to know what measure of responsibility my Party is taking to make certain we send our best candidate forward to the General Election in November. Since the trend these days is that anyone can run for office without restriction, and adopt the persona and title of the Party, I have very little confidence that the Party is going to do anything to vet the qualifications, background or history of our Republican candidates. This ultimately leaves it up to us as individuals to take on this responsibility for our

NJUS trims budget and rate increase

By Sandra L. Medearis

A second shoe has dropped for utility prices. The first shoe, dropped after a NJUS work session April hit ratepayers with a board consensus that water and sewer service rates would go up as much as 21 percent for residential and metered services.

However, after NJUS administration put a spit shine on the budget, a second shoe dropped with less impact. With more cuts and adjustments, Nome Joint Utility Systems sent the Nome Common Council a revised business plan that called for a lower rate increase—12.5 percent for residential accounts—but a larger increase—17 percent—for metered accounts, with changes to other components like demand charge and commodity charges. That increases the monthly charge by $10 for residences and $6.50 for seniors, or, $121 and $78 over a year.

"For a smaller metered water customer [using 5,000 gallons or less], the changes result in a $29 per month additional charge, or $348 annually," John K. Handeland, utility manager, told his board of directors.

"Additional expenses were cut out of the business plan and significant effort put into determining potential other revenue sources and a rate change plan that evaluated residential and commercial (metered) services separately," he said.

At the same time, the board approved an increase on the fuel surcharge rate for electrical service, a tad more than a  $2\phi$  increase from the existing rate in effect since 2011 of  $18.385\phi$  to  $20.5\phi$  per kilowatt hour going forward from April. Factoring in an increase in Power Cost Equalization subsidy from last fall, a customer using 500 kwh would see an increase of \$4.82 monthly, or \$58 on an annual basis, according to Handland. The increase in fuel surcharge is implementing at the level allowed by the tariff.

The cost increase for water and sewer services is the first in nearly 20 years, according to Handeland.

Electric power revenues have decreased in the past several years, making the utility unable to subsidize the water and sewer service, which now has to pay for itself. Therefore, the board and administration have during work sessions sought further ways to reduce costs oil, contain the released used oil, or to clean it up."

According to the EPA, the violations have been cleaned up.

NovaGold Resources, a Canadian junior mining exploration company attempted to become a gold producer by building the Rock Creek mine between 2006 and 2008. Hundreds of workers from all over Alaska and the Lower 48 traveled to Nome to build the mine. Two ironworkers died when the manlift they were standing on to do roof work, crashed to the ground and killed them both.

In November 2008, the NovaGold board of directors abandoned the Rock Creek mine and shuttered the facility after having start up problems with crushing equipment. Company officials blamed the mine's failure on the stock market crash and environmentalists.

The mine sat in care and maintenance status ever since. NovaGold divested most of their holdings in Nome to the newly formed Nome Gold Company and sold Alaska Gold Company, the Rock Creek mine facilities, sand and gravel resources and other holdings at Big Hurrah and in town to BSNC.

Schubert said that BSNC is still evaluating whether the Rock Creek Mine can be reopened. "We have begun to dispose of equipment and other materials that cannot be utilized in the smaller mining operation being considered. We have also begun a modified reclamation process which takes the smaller mining plan into consideration," Schubert wrote.

Following more urging and prompting by Derrick Leedy during public comment, Councilmembers Jerald Brown and Matt Culley asked that Nome's city attorney draft an ordinance forbidding the use of cell phones by drivers within the city limits but excepting certain occupations that use hand-held radios in their work.

"I agree with [banning] cell phones, and use shouldn't be limited to hands-free which are also distracting," Culley said.

Leedy had suggested that handheld phones be allowed.

Culley climbed up on his soapbox to once more urge the Council to define fee waivers for use of public facilities so that such requests could be handled by the City's administration within a set of objective rules, making Council consideration on a caseby-case basis unnecessary.

And finally, Brown succeeded in getting before an attorney for analysis the idea of raising the sales tax on items that bring higher social and economic costs to the City and public, i. e., booze and cigarettes. Councilman Randy Pomeranz seconded the idea.

Scientists discuss juvenile Chinook salmon research in AYK region

By Laurie McNicholas

Scientists who study juvenile Chinook salmon in Alaska, British Columbia, Washington and Oregon met April 23-25 in Anchorage to explore what is known about juvenile Chinook salmon ecology and propose new research to improve understanding of juvenile Chinook mortality as a determinant of brood-year strength in the Arctic-Yukon-Kuskokwim region.

Titled "AYK Sustainable Salmon Initiative Juvenile Chinook Salmon Workshop: Risks and benefits of using juvenile salmonid research to understand adult population dynamics," the workshop is among ongoing efforts by the AYK SSI program to identify and address critical salmon research needs facing the region. The program began in response to disastrously low salmon returns to western Alaska in the late 1990s and early 2000s which brought hardship to communities that depend heavily on salmon fisheries.

The AYK Chinook Salmon Research Action Plan published in August 2013 identifies seven scientific hypotheses that could have contributed to the decline of Chinook salmon stocks in the region. Last week's workshop focused on two of the seven—freshwater mortality and ocean mortality.

The freshwater mortality hypothesis states: "Change in the suitability or productivity of freshwater habitats used for spawning, rearing and migration has contributed to declines in AYK salmon stock." The ocean mortality hypothesis reads: "Ocean conditions (physical and biological) have changed in the Bering Sea, causing an increase in mortality of Chinook salmon during the early marine portion of their life cycle and contributing to the declines of AYK

Chinook salmon stocks."

The workshop addressed a need to determine whether habitat variables during the juvenile life phase are dominant drivers of declines of AYK Chinook salmon stocks. "Medium or long-term data sets from the Bering Sea region informing the relationship between juvenile and adult Chinook salmon productivity are very limited," states the workshop brochure. "Further, new investments in data collection are moderately high-risk for several reasons: (1) A question exists about whether it is feasible to collect data over the length of time necessary to address the above hypotheses; (2) AYK freshwater and early marine habitats are difficult and expensive environments in which to collect data; (3) The possibility exists that medium to long-term data sets on juvenile population dynamics may not inform our hypotheses or advance and improve forecasting and management."

Workshop co-chairs were Chris Zimmerman, U.S. Geological Service Alaska Science Center, and Daniel Schindler, University of Washington School of Aquatic and Fishery Sciences. Zimmerman said reports on salmon studies conducted in the Pacific Northwest and Alaska by workshop presenters can help guide the approach to juvenile salmon research in the AYK region.

Schindler said workshop presenters include scientists with 25 to 30 years of experience in Chinook salmon research. "(They) have no horse in the race and will talk about what worked and didn't," he added.

Citing evidence of a serious decline in Yukon River Chinook salmon stocks in the past decade, Schindler said no commercial Chinook fishery has been conducted for some time and more recently there have been subsistence closures. For the past six years the Chinook salmon escapement goal at the river's Canadian border has not been met, and passage in 2013 was the lowest on record, he added. He said Kuskokwim River Chinook salmon show a long-term pattern of decline similar to that of the Yukon River, and the 2013 run was the lowest on record.

The Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game reports a similar decline in Chinook salmon runs in Norton Commercial Chinook salmon fisheries have been closed since 2005 in subdistricts 5 (Shaktoolik) and 6 (Unalakleet), and escapement goals have been met only half the time since 1999. In 2013 escapement goals for Chinook salmon in the Unalakleet River were not achieved for the third consecutive season despite starting the season with restrictions on Chinook subsistence and sport fisheries and later closing both fisheries.

The first two days of the workshop were open to the public. The third day was a work session solely for workshop presenters and members of the AYK SSI Scientific Statistical Committee to synthesize research recommendations under the freshwater mortality and ocean mortality hypotheses.

Workshop participants developed research recommendations after listening to a dozen reports on Chinook salmon research and monitoring programs in freshwater and marine waters of Alaska, the Pacific Northwest and California. They split into three groups according to habitat type—freshwater, estuarine (early marine life) and marine—to discuss the following questions:

If your group were to develop a juvenile Chinook salmon research or monitoring program in the AYK region, what would this program look like? The issues to discuss are (1) Objectives: What are the core objectives to keep in mind as you address other questions? (2) Focal questions: What are the most pressing research questions to address in the habitat relative to understanding AYK ecology? (3) Data needs: What data would you collect on the fish and on the environment and as part of that, what are the space and time considerations relevant to collecting data? (4) What life stage should garner the most attention?

Research recommendations

The freshwater group identified new data needed to address scientific uncertainties about the freshwater life stage of juvenile Chinook salmon in the AYK region.

The estuarine group called for basic research on juvenile Chinook salmon in estuaries, because less information is available for estuaries than for freshwater or marine habitats in the AYK region.

The marine group recommended scientific work aimed at improving AYK Chinook salmon runs, the causes of variation in survival of the fish and the sources and timing of mortality in the early marine phase of their lifecycle. All three groups recommended studying the environmental effects of climate change over time on AYK juvenile Chinook salmon

A synthesis of workshop recommendations will be posted at the AYK SSI program website www.aykssi.org following review by workshop presenters and members of the program's Scientific Statistical Committee.

Workshop participants were asked to indicate whether they believe the decline in AYK Chinook stocks is due to freshwater, nearshore or offshore ocean issues. In a show of hands, 17 voted for freshwater, 23 for nearshore and 1 for the offshore ocean habitat.

Roy Ashenfelter of Nome emphasized a need for continuous research on AYK Chinook salmon. He asked scientists to develop a cost effective plan within limited available funding to determine why there is such a shortage of the fish. "In northern Norton Sound we try to make a difference in management decisions, but what's missing is scientific data," he said. Rose Fosdick, vice president for natural resources at Kawerak, Inc. also attended the workshop.

Karen Gillis honored

Karen Gillis, who recently retired as executive director of the Bering Sea Fishermen's Assn. was recognized for 23 years of service and presented with a plaque at the workshop. BSFA board chairman Steve Ivanoff of Unalakleet said Gillis has been a primary advocate for development of the Western Alaska Community Development Program. The BSFA is a partner in the AYK SSI program, led efforts to establish it and administers program funding.

"It's about who supports you," Gillis said. "I can retrace our steps in the faces here. It was worth every day of 23 years."

Art Nelson currently serves as the BSFA executive director. BSFA program director Katie Williams said abstracts of workshop presentations will be posted at the AYK SSI website.

Roads are almost all open

The local Dept. of Transportation and Public Facilities reports that the Blodgett Nome-Teller Highway is open all the way as of Monday, April 28. The DOT is still working on opening the Nome-Council Highway and the Kougarok Road. DOT Superintendent Evan Booth asks the public to drive careful as the roads are soft with ruts, pot holes, ice, and partial washouts.

He said his crew is doing their best with two steam generators to open still-frozen culverts in order to prevent road washouts. The DOT began removing snow from the Nome-Council Highway in mid-April and the road is now open up to mile 54. The Nome-Taylor Highway (Kougarok Road) is open up to mile 36.

bered another quake that hit the area a few years back. "I was in the store and remember how the shelves were shaking," he said.

Seismologist Mike West with the Alaska Earthquake Information Center said the AEIC cannot pinpoint the epicenter's exact location within a few miles of Brevig Mission.

The closest seismic stations that measured the quake are at Red Dog mine, Gambell and Nome. West said seismic instruments at stations near Cook Inlet also recorded the Brevig earthquake. Alaska-wide there are 400 stations that pick up on seismic activity.

West said a magnitude 4.4 earthquake typically does not do much damage if one is a few miles away. "But if it's shallow and you're on top of it, it will knock things off shelves, West said.

The magnitude scale measures energy sent out by earthquakes. The energy increases 30-fold for each increase in a number and thus rises exponentially the higher the scale point gets. The earthquake that occurred on April 18 near Noatak measured a magnitude 5.6 and thus had 50 times the energy of last week's Brevig Mission earthquake.

West said that earthquakes are occurring along fault lines and although the AEIC is not aware of fault lines near Brevig or Noatak, however there must some otherwise earthquakes could not have occurred there.

West said both the Noatak and Brevig Mission earthquakes were unusual but not unprecedented.

Asked if seismologists see a connection between two unusual events in the general same area, West said it may be just a coincidence. "There is a small possibility that the Noatak earthquake shifted things, but we can't prove it one way or the other. At this point, I think it is just a coinci-

Legislative session wraps up with education compromise

By Diana Haecker

Working five days past the 90-day session, the House and Senate passed a 1.3 billion education funding and reform bill that was the result of a conference committee compromise reached last Wednesday night.

The bill provides $300 million in forward funding to schools over the next three years. The money is split in half with $150 million to go into the Base Student Allocation, also known as the BSA. The other $150 million will be distributed outside the BSA.

The breakdown for the increase in the BSA sees a $150 increase in the first year, with a $50 a year increase each year for the two following years.

Currently, the BSA is set at $5,680. According to fiscal notes, the BSA next year will be raised to $5,830, the second year to $5,880 and the third year to $5,930.

"The Legislature pledged $300 million of additional support for education to be distributed over the next three years," said Conference Committee Co-Chair Senator Kevin Meyer (R-Anchorage). "Although the House and the Senate started at a wide disparity when we first began these discussions, through a respectful and thoughtful debate, we were able to devise a plan which creates a robust, healthy education package for the next three years."

While the Republican majority issued statements praising the compromise, House and Senate Democrats decried the bill as unsatisfactory. "They're selling this bill as a compromise, but it's still a phony education bill," said House Democratic Leader Chris Tuck. "They're forcing more cuts on schools and asking local taxpayers to pick up some of the slack."

House and Senate Democratic legislators as well as schools, and teacher associations have called for an increase of the BSA funding of $400 per student/year in 2015 and $125 the following two years for a total of $650 over three years. The conference committee bill offers a $250 increase in the BSA over three years.

A contentious part of the bill, funding private schools, was taken out of the law.

The bill increased state monies for student room and board at residential schools, like NACTEC. The bill also repealed the exit exam requirement for high school students, and instead requires a college and career readiness assessment.

Senator Donny Olson said funding for broadband Internet to provide additional opportunities for rural and remote communities was slashed from $7.5 million to $5 million.

House District 39 Representative Neal Foster and District T Senator Donnie Olson voted "yes" on the bill. The Conference Committee compromise bill passed the House with 28 "yays" and 10 "nays."

The bill also funds studies to get a better understanding of the state's education funding mechanisms. The BSA is a complicated formula that is calculated for each school district. It takes into account the school size, the district size, and the location of the school district, among others. The legislators ordered a school district cost study to be conducted that is to determine whether the BSA formula is the best way to come up with stable and predictable education funding.

Another study the legislators wanted done deals with teacher tenure, salaries and benefits proposals. The studies are to be presented by June 15, 2015 to the Legislature.

Rep. Neal Foster's Chief of Staff Paul Labolle said that Foster is hopeful that the results of the school district cost study will show how under-funded rural schools are.

At press time, Rep. Foster was in Gambell and could not be reached directly.

Labolle said that Foster received a lot of input from the Bering Strait and Nome School districts, but he noticed that rural schools in general need to make a more concerted effort to get their message out to the legislators.

Labolle repeatedly heard in various committee meetings that large urban schools are organized and make their needs known, legislators assume that they are the districts in need of help. However, underfunding of rural schools is evidenced by the so-called 70/30 waiver. A statutory requirement under section 14.17.520 reads "A district shall budget for and spend a minimum of 70 percent of its school operating expenditures in each fiscal year on the instructional component of the district budget." However, in regions where it costs more to heat a school than to put books on the shelves and teachers in the class room, a waiver can be issued when a district can prove that the district's failure to meet the expenditure requirements is due to circumstances beyond the control of the district, i.e. fuel costs and transportation costs. The Nome School District and BSSD have been granted those waivers since 2005, according to a Dept. of Education and Early Development operating fund minimum expenditure spreadsheet.

By granting that waiver the State is acknowledging that these schools are underfunded.

Hard numbers on what the education bill means to the Nome School District and BSSD are not available yet until the Department of Education or Legislative Finance comes out with a report, breaking down the numbers by district.

Senator Olson said in a phone interview that he found the 28th Legislative Session not satisfactory. "To me it was disappointing because of the lack of attention to education," Olson said. "This was billed as an education session."

Sen. Olson had pushed for a $400 dollar increase to the BSA, but Senate leadership wanted to put more funding outside of the BSA. "For one, one time funding outside the BSA is more controllable, and also the Senate wanted to do a study whether we would roll the right elements into the BSA to begin with."

At the heels of the education bill, the Legislature passed a $2.2 billion capital budget, including $36 million in capital projects for the House district 39. This includes the following projects: Nome Port improvements (middle dock project $3 million); Stebbins/St. Michael wind energy final design and permitting ($342,000); Brevig Mission water system heat recovery ($731,400); Elim Washeteria ($115,000); Wales heavy equipment repair ($10,000); White Mountain heavy equipment ($150,000); Golovin Volunteer SAR equipment and supplies (($96,100); Nome Anvil Mountain Correctional Center deferred maintenance ($150,000); Nome Youth Facility deferred maintenance ($726,354); Seward Peninsula/Port Clarence Project development ($500,000). St. Michael snow removal equipment building upgrade ($825,000).

The budget also includes $8.5 million for a Road to Ambler.

Things that didn't receive funding were monies to construct new clinics in Shaktoolik, Gambell, Savoonga and Little Diomede. Sen. Olson said that planning money would come from the Dept. of Health and Social Services as the commissioner had committed to planning funds. However, the request for $5 to $7 million for the construction of each of the clinics did not materialize.

A re-appropriation of funds from a different project went to the King Island Community building expansion for $100,000.

Nome athletes compete in Anchorage NYO games

By Sarah Miller

Nome-Beltz was represented at the Native Youth Olympic Games in Anchorage last weekend by 12 athletes. Each student competed in a single event, while the team worked together toward a sportsmanship award. Senior Hannah Tozier competed in the Toe Kick, taking 9th place overall in the final match and reaching a height of 54 inches. Tozier secured a personal best in the Seal Hop at 85 feet, and also competed in the Eskimo Stick Pull. Senior Andrea Irrigoo competed in the Indian Stick Pull, placing among the state's top 20, with five wins and two losses. This will be Tozier and Irrigoo's last NYO competition.

Nome's team has several young members, mainly freshmen, who also competed this year. Ivory Okleasik competed in three events, the One Arm Reach, Alaskan High Kick, and Wrist Carry. Kimberly Clark competed in the Kneel Jump event, reaching a distance in the mid-30 inch range. Emily Pomrenke competed in two events, the One Foot High Kick, scoring 9th place with a height of 76 inches, and the Two Foot High Kick, in which she secured a personal best height. Aaron Rose competed in three events: the One Arm Reach, the Seal Hop, reaching a height of 85 feet; and the Wrist Carry with a distance of 110 feet. Timothy James finished among the top 20 competitors for the Alaskan High Kick, gaining a personal best in this event as well as in the Kneel Jump. James, along with Michael Tocktoo, also served as Wrist Carrier for Nome's athletes competing in this event. Tocktoo competed in four events, including the One Foot High Kick, reaching 80 inches and finishing among the state's top 20. His other events included the Two Foot High Kick, the Eskimo Stick Pull with a record of four wins and two losses, and the Toe Kick. Tocktoo secured a personal best and a top 10 finish in this event. Zach Tozier competed in the Indian Stick Pull, with five wins and two losses, and finished among the state's top 20. Other team members also included Katherine Scott, Madeline Johnson, and Abby Tozier.

The Nanooks' team goal was the win the sportsmanship award, which recognizes qualities including etiquette on the competition floor, helpfulness, respect for the judges, and volunteerism in setting up and taking down events to reduce delay between competitions. Coach Hank Irelan encouraged all team members to focus on this as a team goal, stating, "It is an event all of the team members can participate in. The Nanooks were neck and neck with Dillingham, with the judges recognizing the effort the team was making."

In the end, the award went to Dillingham; however, Irelan expressed pride in the commitment his team made to making this a priority.

As this year's NYO season drew to a close, Irelan and the returning team members bid farewell to its graduating seniors, Hannah Tozier and Andrea Irrigoo. Plans for next year are already in the works to expand the Nome Native Games Extravaganza to include teams from Anchorage, Dillingham and Bethel. This would require a significant fundraising effort on the part of each team to participate, but would enhance the competitiveness of the Nome event, while giving students additional experience to bring to the Anchorage games.

Nome resident competes in Boston Marathon

By Sarah Miller

Nome's own Crystal Tobuk completed the 118th annual Boston Marathon last week: a race considered the world's most prestigious marathon. Runners must qualify to enter Boston by competing in another certified marathon with a finish time determined by age group. For Tobuk's age group, the qualifying time was 3 hours 35 minutes. The field included over 35,000 runners this year, many of whom rank among the world's elite. Boston is a difficult course, with especially challenging hilly sections occurring between the 16 and 20-mile markers, dubbed "Heartbreak Hill" by runners. Weather conditions can also be a factor, with temperatures that may occur anywhere between the mid 40s to mid-80s. This year's forecast called for a high in the mid-60s, which is too warm by many runners'

Tobuk completed the race with a finish time of 4 hours, 11 minutes, and 37 seconds. "I did not get a good time for myself, but I did finish," said Tobuk. "I did not train like I should have. During the race I overheated and Heartbreak Hill surely lived up to its name." Nonetheless, the experience was not one that Tobuk would have missed.

The race was especially poignant for all who participated, coming off of the tragedy of the 2013 bombings. Over 5,000 runners whose runs were halted due to the bombings were given entry into this year's marathon. Winner Meb Keflezighi wore a jersey with the names of those who lost their lives last year written on the back. Some of the finishers also included survivors, such as a husband-wife team who each lost limbs in the attacks and completed the marathon this year riding hand cycles. The spectators were expected to number around one million, and the reigning sentiment among the crowd was "Boston Strong" and "We Run as One."

"The crowd was amazing—never have I seen that many people come out to support the athletes. After I finished, while I was walking back to my hotel, many passing strangers congratulated me. The people of Boston are great. You can tell that although it's a big city, they come together like a small town," said

Tobuk returned to Nome on Saturday, greeted at the airport by a crowd of supportive co-workers, friends and family members bearing banners and balloons. The Nome-St. Lawrence Island Dance Group sang, drummed and danced in Tobuk's honor. The homecoming brought

Tobuk to tears. "I was overwhelmed," she said. "Nome is a great community and I am proud to be from here."

She will continue her racing endeavors with the upcoming Cape Nome Marathon and Half Marathon, a running and biking race which she coordinates. Tobuk has also registered for the Rock 'N' Roll Marathon in St. Louis, Missouri in October. This will be the sixth state in which Tobuk has completed a marathon. "My goal is run a marathon in each battling cancer.

Brain Training: How word games help the brain

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

The human brain is an amazing organ. It is made up of 100 billion specialized cells, called neurons, each with 1,000 to 10,000 connections, called synapses, to other neurons forming a network that can store a lifetime of memories, solve life's most complex problems, and instantly turn thought into words or action.

Like the rest of the body, the brain needs to be exercised to avoid deterioration of the complex network of neurons and synapses. According to research, word games, like crossword puzzles, provide the necessary neurological workout to keep the brain sharp.

For example, research shows that elderly persons who work crossword puzzles at least four times a week are 47 percent less likely to develop dementia, such as Alzheimer's disease, compared with those who work less than one puzzle weekly.

Further research shows that word games and puzzles help even those with early signs of dementia. A study published in the journal Neurology shows that the decline in cognitive functions is delayed by 1.29 years in elderly persons who regularly participate in leisure activities that exercise the brain.

Word games and puzzles help prevent or delay the decline in brain function by building up what experts call "cognitive reserve." Over time, the brain, like most parts of the body, slows in function and speed. This slowing is thought to result from the death of brain cells or the loss of connections between cells due to toxins, alcohol, poor cardiovascular health, protein deposition (Alzheimer's disease), or simple disuse. Only 30 percent of brain deterioration over time is due to genetic factors.

Dysfunctional neurons are like a blocked road. In a sense this is what happens when you cannot remember a person's name. You know the face, but there is a major roadblock between the neurons that recognize the person and the neurons that store the name of that person. In order to remember the name, your brain goes through a complex process of trying multiple detours around the block until a connection is made and the name comes to Building cognitive reserve is like paving new roads all throughout the brain, so if any one path is blocked, an alternate route can be found. Crossword puzzles are an excellent way to build this network of alternate roads. For example, think of a five-letter word that starts with the letter "S", has a middle letter "A", and means intelligent. The brain tries several routes to the answer. The word "clever" has too many letters. "Quick" can mean intelligent but does not contain the correct letters. Two correct options could come to mind: "smart" or "sharp." The correct answer is not as important as the process, which not only solidifies the brain's connections to the correct word but has also strengthened the pathways to every word that DOCTOR comes to mind as a possibility.

Other activities proven to exercise the brain and slow the rate of cognitive decline include: playing board games, playing brain-training apps, working number puzzles, learning to strument, or learning a new language. Daily aerobic activity has also been shown to increase brain volume and processing speed.

Experts agree, the decline in brain function that leads to dementia in later life can have many causes, and therefore, prevention must take many forms. Participating in daily physical and mental activities, while avoiding known toxins and eating healthy brain foods like fish, vegetables, fruits, berries, and nuts can prevent the deterioration of an otherwise healthy brain. Even in cases where dementia is genetic, keeping the brain in top shape and building up the "cognitive reserve" with word games is a proven way to turn back the clock. Now where did I put my keys?

Council saw the beginning of gold mining on the Seward Peninsula, as has already been recorded; but it is quiet now, with a population of 200 only. At the ford of the Niukluk the members of our party re-united and after plunging through the river we skirted the village, taking a trail that followed the left 'limit' of the Niukluk. A curious bit of physiography is here exhibited: the Niukluk and a tributary stream—Ophir Creek—are parallel, occupying the same valley without loss of identity; thus for a mile Ophir Creek runs within 100 vards of the Niukluk River. In order to float a dredge from Council to Ophir, a cut was blasted between the two water-channels. Turning into the canyon of Ophir Creek we passed the dredge, called the Blue Goose, and just above it we reached our destination, the camp of the Wild Goose Mining & Trading Company, distant 42 miles from Solomon.

Here we spent four days. There was much to see in the way of mining operations, including the use of elevators and dredges, but this is not the place for technical details. They will be found elsewhere.* During the daytime we rode or walked to the various centres of mining activity, as, for instance, to the Blue Goose Dredge. This we found idle, owing to an accident such as may befall even the best-managed enterprise. An unexpected encounter with a patch of frozen ground had strained the bucket-line, breaking some of the teeth of the main driving wheel, and some of these broken pieces becoming caught in the pinion had cracked the rim of the driving-wheel itself. At the same time the big wooden anchorage or 'spud' was shattered. Altogether it looked like a serious disaster, for Ophir Creek is a long from timber-yards and foundries. Nevertheless, ingenuity and hard work overcame the damage without delay; anxious to make the most of the only too brief season, the crew worked by night and day, with a right good will, so that within three days the machine once more was digging.

G. H. Russell, the manager, and Jafet Lindeberg, the president of the company, are to be congratulated on this example of efficiency. As stated already, the accident was due to 'bucking' frozen ground; in fact, if anything goes wrong with a dredge in the North, cherchez la glace!

This little dredge is a self-contained machine; on board I found a machine-shop, smithy, and mess-room. The crew take their midday meal on board, and as the soup is agitated by the vibrations of the dredge they must feel as if they were on a Yukon steamer aground. The running time is 110 days each summer, and of this 31 percent is lost by stops for repairs and other causes. About 100,000 cubic yards are dug, for a yield of $85,000 and a profit of $50,000. This is encouraging.

On September 3 we rode to No. 24 Above, or 8 miles beyond the camp on Discovery where the Wild Goose company has its headquarters. We passed the old camp on No. 15 Above where Charles Lane lived several years ago. Claim No. 15 yielded $1,400,000. On No. 14 a piece of ground 1,100 feet long and 125 feet wide yielded $800,000. At the upper end of No. 20 the gravel was worth $20 per cubic yard. It was well named Ophir.

Yet, although so near to Solomon, these gold diggings are not imputed as the source of the Jewish king's wealth. In the Zambesi region of central Africa there is a mountain named Fura, a name taken by the Portuguese from Arab traders, who corrupted it from the Hebrew word Ophir. Indeed. The word Africa itself, which the Romans took from the Carthaginians, is a modification of Afur or Aufur; thus from Ophir, through Afir, Afer, Afur, was Africa evolved.

Carl Peters is my authority, but he went farther, he went to the Zambesi. Between that great river and the Sabi, in modern Rhodesia, he found many thousand old mines, some of which, ten years ago, afforded the foundation for company finance in London. These old workings are scattered over a region covering 750,000 square miles, and within this area are ruins of cities, fortresses, and temples bearing evidence of the ancient worship of Baal-Ashera and of the civilization that characterized the Himvarites of southern Arabia.

From the hot sands beside the Red Sea to the frozen gravel by Bering Sea is a far cry, but the human motive is the same; despite changes of time and place, the digging of gold has been the spur to exploration and the pioneer of civilization.

At claim No. 19 on Ophir a sharp turn in the creek coincides with a sharp turn in the sentiment of these pages, for here is recalled the long litigation known technically as Walton v. Wild Goose. Walton was, and is, a colored lady, whom I happened to see at Nome, while at the Golden Gate hotel. A telephone in the lobby was used by Miss Walton with such noisy insistence as to give an idea of her possibilities as a litigant. In local history she will figure as the poor lone negro-woman who sued a soulless corporation, and lost.

It was thus: In the early days of Ophir Creek the prospectors used printed location forms claiming the bed of the creek and "the meanderings thereof." On No. 19 the stakes were not placed in accordance with this description, but in a straight line across the bend of the channel. A claim-jumper took advantage of this fact, and Miss Walton became a partner with him. After a long struggle in the courts it was decided, as is usual in such cases, that the actual position of the stakes took precedence over the description appearing on the location notice. This decision was appealed and sustained.

Another interesting point arising in this litigation was the assertion that Capt. Walker, the locator by proxy, had not done sufficient assessment work. Walker was stationed at St. Michael; after the close of navigation he sent three men overland, instructing them to comply with the mining regulations. They dug a trench, which, it was said, took 10 days of work. The Walton people claimed that such a trench could be dug in 3 days, and they caused such a trench to be dug in that amount of time. The Judge, however, instructed the jury that they might consider the distance from the source of supplies, and the consequent expense involved, in estimating the cost of the work done on the claim. It was 175

That evening snow fell and the rapidly shortening days gave warning to the mine operators that their season was already waning. The absence of smoke, either from forest fires or factories, caused the atmosphere to be wonderfully clear. It was to this cause that I impute the marvelous coloring at sunset: A gray sky, belted near the horizon by a broad band of pink; under it purple clouds, against which the long curve of the hills and the sweeping contours of the darkly green tundra were thrown in exquisite purity of line and color. Mining and Scientific Press, November 28, 1908; also March 13,

Legislature passes law to allow arming of VPSOs

By Diana Haecker

In mid-April the 28th Alaska Legislature passed a law that gives Native associations who administer the Village Public Safety program the option to arm their Village Public Safety Officers.

The bill, HB 199, was introduced by Representative Bryce Edgmon (D-Dillingham) and co-sponsored by 13 lawmakers, including Rep. Neal Foster (D-Nome). "I appreciate the Senate's support and thank Senator Donny Olson for carrying companion legislation and speaking for HB 199 on the Senate floor," Edgmon said. "After the shooting death of Manokotak VPSO Thomas Madole last year, I realized that it is just not reasonable to continue to ask these men and women to put their lives in harm's way without being fully equipped to protect themselves."

Sen. Olson's companion bill was SB 98.

The policy endorsed by the bill will expand VPSO training through the Alaska Dept. of Public Safety's State Trooper Academy in Sitka. The firearms training that VPSOs will receive will be identical to State Troopers and municipal police officers. The bill does not require VPSOs to be armed; it allows the regional Native associations and communities served by VPSOs to make that choice. "Everyone involved must have a thorough understanding of the issues surrounding arming these officers, and the ultimate decision will rest with the regional Native associations and communities," Edgmon said. "My hope is that arming these first responders, who sometimes because of weather face hours or even days before Trooper back-up arrives, will have a deterrent effect that makes our communities safer."

Kawerak Inc. administers the VPSO program for the Bering Strait region, in partnership with city governments and the Alaska State Troopers. Kawerak Inc. President Melanie Bahnke said how Kawerak will implement the new law is going to be a board of directors decision. "We are not going to do any immediate changes," Bahnke said. In a survey among the region's VPSOs, half of them were in favor of carrying arms, the other half was against it. Some felt that walking armed into a tense situation may increase the chances of being harmed. Bahnke said she defers the decision whether to arm or not to arm VPSOs to the board. The board will meet next in September. In the meantime, Kawerak will watch closely how other regions are implementing the law, Bahnke said.

Alaskans train to counter DV and sexual assault

Rural law enforcement and victim advocates went through training last week to teach people in their communities methods to stop the epidemic of domestic violence and sexual assault in Alaska.

Village Public Safety Officers, Alaska State Troopers, Kotzebue Police, Bristol Bay area victim advocates and training coordinators with the Northwest Arctic Borough School District and Kawerak, Inc. underwent training so that they in turn can teach the empowerment program called "My Body ... My Life" in schools and communities throughout Alaska.

The program is designed to teach anyone over the age of 13 not only self-defense techniques, but also several psychological and physical practices to avoid being placed in a dangerous situation.

The Relationship Education and Awareness for Life (REAL) Men section of the program is developed for males over the age of 13 to facilitate social change and acceptance among men.

The weeklong training was sponsored by the Drug Abuse Resistance Education (D.A.R.E.) Alaska and taught by program founder Bob Moore, a police sergeant from Norman, Oklahoma. Moore is training participants to take these techniques home and teach them in their communities. Those attending the training will be the first instructors outside Oklahoma, certified in teaching the REAL Men course.

"This is taking the next step from awareness to teaching men and women, girls and boys ages 13 and up the verbal and physical cues of sexual assault," said Naomi Sweetman, the program coordinator for the D.A.R.E. statewide.

NSEDC won't jump into wood pellet or propane business yet

By Diana Haecker

Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation's board of directors met for their first quarter meeting in a two-day session last week in Unalakleet.

Chief Operating Officer Tyler Rhodes brought to the board a report and recommendations relating to the potential expansion of the NSEDC's bulk fuel loan program to include wood pellets and propane gas as heating fuel substitutes.

The board had directed staff to research the possibility of expanding their bulk fuel loan program to include alternative heat resources such as wood pellets used in special wood stoves.

Rhodes said he investigated prices of wood pellets and propane, but the cost of transporting the goods to Nome and the region turned out to make the undertaking cost-prohibi-

"We would not get as good a price as the group that started exploring the idea," said Rhodes

The barge price difference between a quote for NSEDC and the group was $27,000.

Rhodes said there is not enough demand for those wood pellets to get an economy of scale transportation price reduction that could be passed on to the customer. An option would be to do a loan program. Don Stiles said that this addresses another big need of the region: reasonable transportation costs for goods coming to this region.

NSEDC chair Dan Harrelson proposed the idea of investing in a barge. "Could we buy a barge and bring it up ourselves? Would we break even?

Harrelson tasked Rhodes to find out if other western CDQ groups would be interested in partnering with NSEDC to invest in a barge company to benefit western Alaska with reasonable transportation

Court leaves Michels' bail at $50,000

By Sandra L. Medearis

Nome Superior Court turned away two proposed third-party custodians April 30, sending Adrienne Michels back to jail custody until she can propose another candidate for court approval.

Michels is being held on charges in the death of Wagner Wongittilin, Police reports say that Michels struck Wongittilin with her vehicle early April 12, near the corner of Fifth Avenue and Bering Street. Wongittilin, a Savoonga ivory carver artist and volunteer firefighter, was pronounced dead about an hour later in the hospital emergency room.

According to a police complaint, a witness stated that Wongittilin was with two relatives walking north on Bering Street when Wongittilin jumped in front of Michels' Ford Explorer and waved his arms. Michels left her vehicle with the drivers' door open, according to James Goldbeck, and fled the scene. Michels called her father, who found her and returned with her to the scene, following a conversation with her that lasted three minutes, according to court documents.

Judge Paul D. Roetman rejected the custodians at a the bail hearing April 30 and refused to lower Michels bail requirement, letting it stand at $50,000

Michels was arraigned April 15 on manslaughter, a Class A Felony, leaving the scene of an accident involving injury or death, and driving under the influence of alcohol, both misdemeanors. A grand jury convened April 17 indicted Michels on those charges and added another felony charge-failure to render assistance to an injured, a Class C Felony. The case moved up to Alaska Superior Court. Michels appeared April 21 for arraignment on the four charges in the higher court. At that hearing, the court continued her bail at $50,000 with the requirement that she be released only to a third party under conditions to be

Bering Sea Alliance brings partners together in Gambell

By Diana Haecker

To residents of the Bering Strait and Norton Sound region, the way Arctic development is approached resembles a farmer putting the cart before the horse.

Who protects the Bering Strait?

The reason for the meeting is the increasing industrial and tourist ship traffic over the top of the world and through the narrow Bering Strait as well as industry ramping up for oil and gas development since a projected 20 percent of the world's hydrocarbons are hidden in the Arctic and more accessible due to climatechange induced sea ice decrease.

Bering Sea Alliance LLC, a group consisting of seven village corporations, staged an Arctic Resource Development and Infrastructure meeting in Gambell with the intent to inform St. Lawrence Island residents of industry plans and government processes and also to bring the visitors to "ground zero", where the ship traffic and development will have the most impact on the lives of people who depend on the seasonal migration of marine mammals and the integrity of the ocean environment for food.

BSA LLC Chief Executive Officer Art Ivanoff organized the meeting and said in his opening remarks that the intent of holding the meeting in Gambell was to bring the process

"There are sessions regarding Arctic development in Anchorage, Girdwood and Juneau," he said. "We have a sense of urgency because there is a clear understanding of what's going on. At the same time the agencies don't have the sense of urgency that we have — the difference is that we live here. Dear Editor:

"350,000,000 STRANGERS?"

Armed camps are springing up all around the nation! These little war zones, however, are often separated by nothing more than a few feet of air that usually bristles with tension and friction! These little enclaves are more commonly referred to, however, as the family home!

But why should this come as any surprise, especially considering the fact that just outside of the walls of home, there can often exist a virtual iungle! A wilderness that is inhabited by like creatures that are kept at bay only through fear, a few laws, and what remains of the human conscience, or soul if you prefer!

So I ask you, how can we ever expect security, brotherly love, or even trust on a world-wide scale, when many of us can not even get along with our immediate family on a day to day basis? And how, pray tell, can we ever attain these wonderful things when even our own government sometimes behaves like it, too, is strictly in business for itself? H. Rick Tavares

Dear Editor: Open letter to all Sitnasuak (village) Native Corporation shareholders

May 31, 2014 at 10 a.m. the annual meeting of SNC shareholders will be held at the Nome Elementary School. I would highly recommend shareholders read through the annual report before filling out the proxy statement (ballot). Early bird gifts is not a good reason to vote without first examining the profits and or losses for each and every subsidiary and llc. Evaluate the performance that the full board and management accomplished for the past 5 years.

There is a need to make change in the SNC board and staff/management because there is less accountability and accountability to the board and the owners, the shareholders.

Since 2007, the company has become a financial provider to close held llc's and even the full board may not be aware of business operations. Until after the fact.

A major concern, SNC shareholders are not able to attend board meetings because they are provided an agenda; able to share their concerns; then dismissed.

There is also an immediate need dismiss the president of SNC Charles W. Fagerstrom, for failing to support the best interests of the shareholders. More fish in our adjacent rivers is only one reason. There is also a formal complaint filed by a shareholder of record since Nov. 2013 and there has be no official board action to address this serious administrative action. Why? Ask the full board at the annual meeting. Shareholder Chuck Wheeler Nome, AK

The Ride to Ophir

From: T. A. Rickard, Through the Yukon and Alaska, chapter 34, pages 363-380

Part IV

On the morning of September 4 we started on the return journey, leaving Ophir Creek at 9:40 a.m. and reaching Leland's camp at 5:10 p.m., thus covering the 42 miles in 7 ½ hours, including the half-hour halt at midday in Skookum Gulch. It was cold and windy weather, culminating in a slight fall of snow. On this day my saddle-bags contained 561 ounces of gold, in two bars, but the additional weight did not bother Tony, who maintained a steady trot over the uneven trail. Crossing the divide into the valley of the Solomon, I noted the domeshaped hills of limestone, weathered and gray, with tundra clinging to their feet. It was a forbidding landscape: cold gray hills against a wintry sky. But the air was bracing and the swinging gait of the horse made exhilarating exercise, ending in a comfortable rendezvous at Oro Fino, as the camp of the Three Friends is called. At 7:40 the next morning we were in the saddle again, arriving at Solomon at 8:25; here the gold was taken from me for shipment by the Flyer, that unhappy vessel being visible off-shore, where she was again stranded on a bar; as the tide was ebbing, the prospects of a start were poor. This was fortunate, for it decided us to ride to Nome on our trusty horses rather than risk a voyage along the coast in a miserable launch. Munro, Turner, and I left Solomon at 9:15, and then commenced the finest ride of my life.

The road ran along a sand-spit, formerly a bar, but now green with tough grass. With firm ground underfoot and willing horses, the telephone poles flanking the road in long perspective were passed in quick succession. Only a hundred yards to the left was Bering Sea, smooth and sunlit, with no suggestion of the storms that had flung the gray driftwood high on the edge of the land. On the right, also a hundred yards away, a long lagoon mirrored the blue and white of the sky; inland stretched the tundra, in the tawny livery of autumn, crossed by the purple shadows of traveling clouds, while in the distance northward rose the limestone hills whence come the Bonanza and Flambeau rivers. At 18 miles from Solomon the road is interrupted by an estuary at the mouth of which is Port Safety. Here is the Government wireless telegraph station. As we waited for the ferry the only sound to be heard was the coughing of the gasoline engine that runs the dynamo of the wireless equipment. This station is said to be the most successful of its kind in catching messages from passing ships, and it is also the only means of telegraphic communication between the Seward Peninsula and the outer world, messages being transmitted to St. Michael, whence they are forwarded overland by the military telegraph system, which crosses Alaska by way of Eagle and Fairbanks.

Beyond Port Safety the road continued excellent, clinging to the edge of the land, so that we were always close to the sea. Several Eskimo camps were passed. Countless dogs made the quiet air vibrate with their melancholy howls. The squaws were picking blueberries, using wooden rakes made from the covers of cigarboxes. One young woman in a gay parka was attended by a young man who lay idly watching his belle at her pleasant task. An Eskimo idyll-the same old game! On a tent-pole the skin of a hair-seal was drying and on other frames fish were hanging like bananas. We saw an oomiak or native boat containing a family of ten, the father continued on page 13 be on the remote and windswept Bering Sea Island of St. George, Alaska, so it was quite a shock for Mark Merculief and his coworkers from the City of St. George when they opened a shipping container of grass seed and straw, and found house mice scurrying around inside.

St. George is one of the few populated islands in the world where house mice have not become established and the residents of the island (both people and wild animals) want to keep it that way. No nuisance mice, gnawed food packages or threats to native wildlife for them!

"It was a surprise," said Merculief, 'and not a nice one."

Recognizing the threat, the city workers immediately contacted Chris Merculief, President of the St. George Traditional Council, the organization charged with protecting the island from rodent introductions.

Merculief, and a crew from the Traditional Council, set traps and spread the news to the Alaska Maritime National Wildlife Refuge because part of the island is a National Wildlife Refuge and home to two million nesting seabirds.

The Refuge and the Traditional Council have long been partners working to keep St. George free of invasive rodents, so once the mice were discovered they worked together with the City to come up with a plan to remove the mice.

Two experienced rodent trappers from the Refuge, Steve Ebbert and Greg Thomson flew to St. George as soon as possible, thanks to financial help provided by the National Fish & Wildlife Foundation. Once the biologists made it to the island they immediately got to work eradicating the

When the dust cleared more than 50 mice were trapped by the collective effort of the Refuge, the Traditional Council and the City. Fortunately, all the mice were inside the shipping container and had not yet spread to adjacent containers or the tundra.

"We got really lucky here" said Alaska Maritime Refuge biologist Marc Romano. "If mice had established themselves on St. George they could have threatened the wildlife and gotten into the village." Mice can kill wild bird eggs and chicks, alter native vegetation, and could have threatened the native lemming species that's found only on St. George Island. In addition, eradicating mice once they've become established is expensive and in many circumstances nearly impossible.

Federal Subsistence Board makes changes to hunting, fishing regs

The Federal Subsistence Board met April 15-18 in Anchorage to consider 55 proposed changes to the Federal subsistence hunting and trapping regulations, recommend changes to the Secretaries of Interior and Agriculture on the Rural Determination process and consider fisheries special actions affecting the Kuskokwim River.

The Board also conducted Tribal and Alaska Native Corporation consultations on the wildlife regulatory proposals, the Rural Determination process and the special actions.

Determination Rural Process

As directed in the Secretarial review of the Federal Subsistence Management Program, the Federal Subsistence Board, with Regional Advisory Council input, conducted a public review of the current rural determination process. A summary and analysis of the public, Regional Advisory Council, Tribal and Alaska Native Corporation comments was presented to the Board. The Board discussed several options and voted to recommend to the Secretaries of the Interior and Agriculture that the current regulations be revised to allow for the Board to determine which areas or communities in Alaska are nonrural; all other communities and areas would therefore be rural.

Changes to the Subsistence Hunting and Trapping Reg-

The Board adopted 39 of the 55

proposed changes to Federal hunting and trapping regulations.

Among the changes approved by the Board are: Permit requirements for caribou in Units 9A, 9B, 9C, 17A, 17B, 17C, 18, 19A, and 19B.

Subarea RG245 in Unit 6D was opened to the harvest of mountain goats by Federally qualified subsistence users

The harvest limits were increased, the season dates extended, and the boundaries of the areas for the harvest of moose were modified in Unit

The Red Sheep and Cane Creek drainages remained closed to non-Federally qualified subsistence hunters during the Aug 10-Sept. 20 sheep season in the Arctic Village Sheep Management Area of Unit 25.

Changes were made to the harvest limits, season dates, number of permits issued in Units 22D and 22B to protect the continued viability of the muskox population and the continued subsistence uses of muskox. In addition an 804 analysis conducted under Section 804 of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act (ANILCA), which establishes a priority among Federally qualified subsistence users, was adopted by the Board.

The harvest quota for moose by residents in Units 26C and 26B remainder was increased from 3 to 5.

Residents of Units 20E, 25B, 25C, and 25D were added to the customary and traditional use determination

Fishery Special Actions

The Federal Subsistence Board took action on two Kuskokwim River Chinook Salmon Special Action requests:

The Board approved the special action request to allow the use of dip nets to take salmon in the Kuskokwim River drainage, with the provision that all Chinook salmon caught be released immediately.

The Board adopted the special action to close the Federal public waters that are within and adjacent to the Yukon Delta National Wildlife Refuge to the harvest of Chinook salmon except by the residents of the Kuksokwim drainage and the villages of Chefornak, Kipnuk, Kwigillingok and Kongiganek

Additionally, the Board delegated the authority to the in-season manager the authority to determine when the 60-day emergency special actions would start.

Court

On April 30, a scheduled bail hearing did not occur because the court ruled out Michel's father, Eric Osborn, as a custodian, ruling that his status as a potential witness made him ineligible. Judge Paul A. Roetman presided at the hearing by phone from Kotzebue, as Asst. DA Tom Jamgochian, using a peremptory challenge, had bumped local Judge Tim Dooley off the case.

Myron E. Angstman of Bethel, attorney for Michels' defense, told the court he would not be calling Osborne; however, Jamgochian declared that he would put Osborne on the stand for questions.

Michels' relative, Crystal Lockwood, came to court also with the plan to share third party custody duties with Osborne.

A third-party custodian must maintain sight and sound contact with a person released to them at all times and notify police of any violation of this and other conditions of release.

Coming into court for her hearing, Michels smiled at her family. "It's so good to see you guys," she said.

Angstman told the court that the bail amount-$50,000-was too high. Michels sought reduction from $50,000 to $5,000 and that Michels, upon release would present no more risk to the public than any other person charged with DWI.

"The bail should be the same as for DWI. A DWI presents the same risk to the public as this lady would," Angstman told the court.

The high bail was based on punishment, rather than to reduce risk to the public, he added.

Wrong, said Jamgochian-Michels' charges were not the same, but more serious-she had been charged on manslaughter, a Class A Felony. Even had she been charged on felony DUI that would be a Class C Felony. The court needed to consider that a Class A Felony was two levels higher, Jamgochian said.

Michels' bail remained $50,000.

The court scheduled Michels' next hearing for July 16.

When Michels is ready to present another candidate as a third party custodian, a new bail hearing may be scheduled in the interim.

The trial is set for Aug. 18.

Meanwhile, as of May 5, Michels remained in custody at Anvil Mountain Correctional Center.

Bethel official on leave after resignation of police chief

By Nathaniel Herz Anchorage Daily News

Bethel's city council has placed City Manager Lee Foley on paid administrative leave as an outside attorney examines several city contracts and agreements, as well as an apparent violation of nepotism

The mayor of the Southwest Alaska hub community of 6,300 is referring to city affairs as a "big mess" following Foley's suspension April 22 and the February resignation of Police Chief Larry Elarton.

The city council's seven members are now awaiting a report within the next week that could either clear Foley or possibly lead to his departure, said Councilman Mark Springer.

"As a result of all this, we could be patting him on the back and saying, 'Good job,' "Springer said. "Or we could be patting him on the back, saying, 'Go look for one.' '

Foley, who could not immediately be reached for comment, has been Bethel's manager — the city's chief executive officer — since 2008.

He's been under scrutiny since Feb. 11, when the city council voted unanimously to spend up to $40,000 on a lawyer to investigate a series of contracts and agreements, as well as what Mayor Joe Klejka describes as an existing violation of nepotism

Foley's son works for Bethel's information technology department.

'Clearly, in Bethel municipal code, it says that the city manager can't have a family member working for them. And he hired his son," Klejka said in a phone interview.

The city's rules also prohibit department heads from employing their relatives, and the daughter of Elarton, the police chief who resigned, had been recently hired as a patrol officer. She later returned to her old job as a dispatcher, Springer said.

The council voted 5 to 2 at a meeting last Tuesday to put Foley on paid leave, replacing him temporarily with Port Director Pete Williams, according to a story in the Tundra Drums newspaper.

Foley was also told to relinquish all of his city property, though at the meeting he apparently refused to turn over a book containing police department records, according to the newspaper story. A city police officer was asked to make sure that

Foley didn't remove any materials from his office, Springer said.

Foley had already been directed by the city council to turn over all of his city-related emails. He initially had been open to the investigation, saying in February that it could "offer suggestions that could help us do things better," according to local radio station KYUK.

The outside attorney hired by the city, Anchorage lawyer Michael Gatti, is also exploring a tangle of other questions raised by council members. Neither Klejka nor Springer would discuss the investigation in detail, but according to city council minutes, it covers:

• Employee complaints of intimidation by supervisors.

• Agreements between the city and Sutton Business Solutions, a firm owned by former city finance director Bobby Sutton, according to

• Accounting of leave time used by the city's salaried employees.

• The awarding of city work to demolish Bethel's old police station.

 Agreements and leases of the city airport's sand pit by "private enti-

The city council has discussed the investigation at several meetings this year, both in public and in private executive sessions — some of which have stretched for more than two

Some Bethel residents have criticized council members for not revealing more details. Local contractor Harry Faulkner said in a phone interview that the city council had been micromanaging Foley and 'questioning everything he did.'

Faulkner added he was worried that the dispute between Foley and the city council would make it difficult for Bethel to find good candidates to fill vacant municipal positions.

"All they have to do is Google 'Bethel,' and they'll say, 'To hell with this place,' "Faulkner said. "There's certain leeways the departments have to take to get the job done ... I think it was all justifiable."

Klejka, the mayor, acknowledged that some of the city council's concerns are "pretty minor." However, he added, "we're getting concerned, because there were what appeared to be violations of Bethel municipal code."

"I am with Harry (Faulkner) - I don't like to knee-jerk anything,"

Klejka said. "But it seemed like it was getting to the point where we needed to actually investigate this."

The issue of nepotism in Bethel government is not new, according to

He said that Foley's son had worked for the city for several years. While council members had been aware of his employment, Springer added, nobody had specifically raised it as a problem.

Councilwoman Heather Pike has also said that she would resign if the outside attorney deems her to be in violation of Bethel's rules, given that her "significant other" works for a Bethel department, according to

In February, Foley submitted a proposal that would have replaced the city's strict nepotism rules with a more flexible set of guidelines, though the measure failed by a vote

The move would have allowed qualified relatives of municipal employees to work in Bethel government, according to the proposal, "as long as such employment does not, in the opinion of the city, create actual or perceived conflicts of inter-agencies," said Ivanoff. "For the most part, we have been left at the sidelines." While Ivanoff stressed the protection of the resources, he also pointed out that this region needs jobs. Rural villages along the Bering Sea and Chukchi Sea coastline bear high cost of living and a lack of jobs. "We need jobs in our region to alleviate the pain we all feel," Ivanoff said.

Another topic of discussion was what village residents have to offer:

a deep understanding of unforgiving weather and ocean conditions, knowledge of the sea and the ice as well as animal movements and migrations. That local knowledge can and should be put to use when developing the Arctic in a smart way, was a theme heard throughout the conference.

Ivanoff calls this 'building capac-

"Building capacity to me means training the people who are acclimated to the weather, but also having the right tools in the tool box, like a [oil spill response equipment] depot in Wales and Gambell and to have equipment ready at a moment's notice to be deployed," Ivanoff said.

An illustrious group of people and representatives of federal agencies, non-profits and conservation groups did hop on small bush planes to venture out to St. Lawrence Island, where winter still has a grip on the land. Only a few bare patches of per-

prices

Harrelson admitted that NSEDC's expertise in transportation issues is minimal, but Stiles said, "Same thing with the bulk fuel and we did it."

Rhodes said one Connex would hold enough pellets to heat five homes for one year.

Harrelson commented that when flying along Norton Sound, he observed miles and miles of driftwood piled up on the beaches. "If we could devise a system to develop a wood pellet product right here in the region, it would provide jobs and avoid the transportation issue," he said.

In other business, the board approved Outside Entity Funding projects. Each community has an OEF group that rates funding proposals and in the end, NSEDC's board votes on the short list of projects for the communities. NSEDC approved the following:

Brevig Mission: $5,000 for a BSSD bicultural renovation project; $88,500 for the City to hire a Village Police Officer. Diomede: $140,000 for the Diomede Health Clinic. Elim: $17,177 for the Covenant Youth of Alaska youth mentoring program; $24,000 for a mini truck for the City of Elim; $73,900 for a slough project. Gambell: $24,500 for a summer youth snack program by the Native Village of Gambell. Koyuk: $60,000 for the VPSO housing unit. Nome: $15,000 for the Anvil City Science Academy for laptop funding; $25,000 for the Nome Boys and Girls Club; $10,000 for King Island building expansion; $24,000 for the village of Solomon for emergency communication.

Savoonga: $120,000 for a dump truck. Shaktoolik: $120,000 for a gravel storm berm to ward off erosion. Unalakleet: $2,200 for the humpy derby; $51,200 for the Native Village of Unalakleet for an Elders nutrition and care program; $25,000 for transportation safety for the Covenant Bible Camp. Wales: $60,000 for the Kingikmiut Dance Festival. White Mountain: $15,300 for a youth mentoring program by the Covenant Youth of Alaska.

Kawerak received nearly $23,000 for a cardboard crusher to make pellets meant to be used for heating purposes. The rest of the $100,000 set aside for regional outside entity funding projects will roll over to next year.

The board approved buying thermal imaging cameras for every NSEDC member community and Shishmaref for Search and Rescue purposes.

In committee reports, the board approved bylaw changes updating residency requirements and loan policies. Alaska law prohibits nonprofit corporations from making loans to directors and officers. NSEDC's bylaws added to prohibit loans to directors and officers of affiliates, which prevents these individuals from participating in NSEDC's fishermen loan programs that are available to all other residents. The recent change to this provision was to scale back the loan prohibitions to those that are required by state law.

The residency bylaw was amended to clarify the existing requirements regarding residency in the Norton Sound Region. Residency is required to participate in NSEDC's benefit programs, such as the scholarship and vocational education programs. The changes also added several new allowable absences, for which an individual may leave the region without losing residency status, including one that addresses absences from the region for medical treatment.

Dan Harrelson gave a finance committee report, saying that the first quarter financial review looked solid. The finance committee recommended spending $500,000 to upgrade and build an addition to the Nome office. The board granted the recommendation.

Under new business, Kawerak approached NSEDC to co-fund the Early Childhood Education with $250,000. Don Stiles commented, "If NSEDC takes over federal or state responsibilities, then we get stuck with it forever. I think education is the state's responsibility. It's $250,000 now, but it will be more in the future," Stiles said.

The board denied the request.

The board went into executive session during SIU Alaska Corp. report; and at the end of the board meeting, the board heard a litigation update and an Unaatuq proposal.

fectly round beach pebbles peaked through the snow and building entrances were still blocked by snowdrifts.

Fresh off from Juneau, Senator Donny Olson and Representative Neal Foster attended the conference, addressing an attentive audience at the Qernguughvik building. Sen. Olson is optimistic of the good that may come of Arctic development. "I see more and more opportunities arise in spite of the anxiety we feel about not being in control," Sen. Olson said. He concurred with Ivanoff to insist on job creation for the region. "We want the economic opportunity but we also want to preserve our resources," Sen. Olson stated. But he also expressed concern that state agencies, particularly the Alaska Dept. of Environmental Conservation, are not ready to respond to the worst case scenario: an oil spill or shipwreck in the Bering Strait as happened with the Exxon Valdez in Prince William Sound or the Gulf of Mexico with the Deepwater Horizon blowout. "We are inadequately prepared for something like this to happen here," Sen. Olson said.

Multi-billion dollar corporations

Multi-billion dollar corporations are looking at the Arctic for opportunity as the last frontier and development is going to occur— be it through oil and gas development or increased cargo and tourism ship traffic. "We can't stop progress," Olson said, "but we need to be involved and part of the decision-making process."

The jurisdiction over the Bering Strait area is getting further complicated because of its status as an international strait, governed by international maritime law, and because of neighboring Russia. Rep. Neal Foster pointed out that current U.S.-Russian relations are strained because of the Russian invasion of Crimea, Russian militarization of its Arctic posts and aggressive resource extraction offshore. The Russian government is not as forthcoming with information as would be desirable and yet it is in Alaska's interest to keep relations active. "We've got to find a way to bring them into the discussion," said Rep. Foster. "Anything that happens on their side will affect us here."

Mark Fesmire with the federal Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement in Alaska said that marching orders from Washington are to keep talking with the Russians, but to not travel to any events held in Russia.

Foster also reiterated that he'll be working in Juneau to make sure that Bering Strait communities have a decision making seat at the table and not just a token position to deal with the future of this region. To that effect, Ivanoff added that the BSA will be working with Foster and Olson on drafting language for a bill that would deal with oil spill prevention and mitigation in Alaska's northern waters.

Foster heard comments that stressed the importance of subsistence as a major issue. Sivuqaq President Paul Apangalook pointed out that last year's dismal walrus hunt resulted in a "declaration of some sort," he said, but it really didn't do anything concrete to help our residents to fill their freezers or refrigerators. A trip to the store confirms what holds true for most rural communities: nearly empty shelves, hardly any fresh produce and exorbitant prices. Subsistence food and meat harvested from the island's reindeer or the ocean is making survival possible. Any threat to the continuance of whales, walruses or seals passing by the island in their biannual migrations, is a direct threat to the survival of the resi-

Deborah Vo with Senator Lisa Murkowski's office updated the audience on Sen. Murkowski's fight against the EPA regarding changing air quality rules; improving ice and weather forecasts; and continued mapping of the northwest Alaskan coastline and St. Lawrence Island.

Conoco Philipps Director of Village Outreach Lisa Pekich presented historic and present activities of Conoco in Alaska. Pekich said, "Due to regulatory uncertainty, we suspended all activities in the Chukchi lease area." The company remains active to explore and produce oil and gas in the Beluga gas fields, Kuparuk and Pt. Thomson gas lease and on its North Slope as-

In regards to offshore oil and gas development, Pekich said that changing rules makes it hard for companies to commit to exploring and developing leases. "We need a reasonable regulatory frame work, but it gets tougher to drill in the U.S. with each incident like the Gulf of Mexico."

Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement Director Mark Fesmire took exception to that statement. During his presentation on BSEE's role in enforcing drilling permits, he said, "Conoco said in their presentation, that there are uncertain regulations and I disagree. They just don't like what the regulations are."

Pekich said that since Conoco Philipps does not explore offshore anytime soon, there is no plan for oil spill mitigation or prevention. Branson Tungiyan, who has been a subsistence advisor for Shell during their exploratory expedition in 2012, commented that even though there is no plan, Conoco should consider the locals and their concerns when the time comes to develop a plan. "That's my point. You have no plan, but the BSA put us in touch with you and we ask you to build us into your agenda," Tungiyan said.

TRADITIONAL KNOWLEDGE (top)— Paul Apangalook with Sivuqaq Inc. commented during the meeting that when Gambell Elders contribute to traditional knowledge projects the content shall not be politicized.

ties. The BOEM manages oil and gas resource evaluations, environmental studies and assessments, leasing activities. Dr. Kendall explained that BOEM is like the landlord managing federal properties and that BSEE is the "policeman" enforcing permit requirements during all phases of offshore Arctic exploration and production. The BSEE is only enforcing activities during the drilling, not the mobilization and demobilization of equipment, nor the transit of ships and drill platforms to and from the drill site.

Dr. Kendall said that BOEM will come out with Arctic standards. 'What are those? My boss says: read the Shell report and there are your answers," Kendall said. In 2012, Shell was the first company to set out on an exploratory drill campaign in the Chukchi and Beaufort seas. Shell was allowed to drill two test wells, albeit not into the oil-bearing zone since they didn't have a functioning cap and containment system. Shell had 11 subsistence advisors in place who advised them regularly, they had a conflict avoidance agreement with the Alaska Eskimo Whaling Commission to not drill until whale hunting is over and they were heavily watched and regulated by BOEM and BSEE. Tungiyan remembered that the subsistence advisors told Shell to get out in time before the ice was moving and their advice was not headed.

The vessels and the two drill rigs left the drill sites around November 1 and did make it to Dutch Harbor, but the transit from there to Seattle ended up making headlines when the drill rig Kulluk became separated from its tow tug and grounded near Kodiak. The Coast Guard investigated and the Secretary of the Interior issued a scathing report on Shell and the lack of oversight of its con-

However, Dr. Kendall pointed out that oil and gas exploration only made for 10 percent of all ship traffic traversing through the Bering Strait in 2012. Those 10 percent are regulated and watched, whereas the remaining 90 percent of ship traffic were not regulated at all.

The U.S. Coast Guard is the agency that enforces U.S. law in the U.S. waters along the Alaskan coast. Many questions from the audience during the meeting remained unanswered because the Coast Guard chose to not send a representative to the Gambell meeting.

Senator Lesil McGuire, co-chair of the Alaska Arctic Policy Commission, was supposed to attend the meeting as well, but opted out as weather seemed to make a quick inand-out trip impossible.

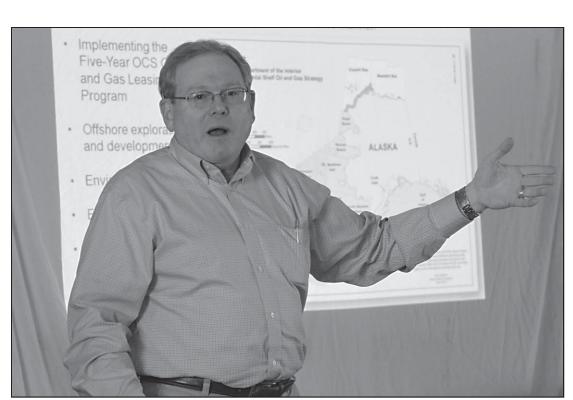

Also invited but not showing up were Bruce Sexauer who was slated to give an update on Arctic Ports and infrastructure; Ltn. Commander Jason Boyle with the U.S. Coast Guard and other presenters associated with Bering Strait Native Corporation and the state's Alaska Industrial Development and Export Authority – recently receiving the ability to make loans for arctic infrastructure development.

In the meantime, BSA will continue to work on an action plan to better the State of Alaska's involvement and to conduct oil spill training in the region. So far, Ivanoff said, 40 regional residents have been trained in Hazmat classes, sponsored by Shell.

"We're going to press the state legislature to pony up money to build resources that are badly needed for the ship traffic increase that is oc-curring," said Ivanoff. "We are also getting ready for oil and gas development over the next 10 years. I think the villages really understand and have that sense of urgency to build capacity to protect the resources we depend on.'

The next BSA meeting is slated for August 12 and 13 in Gambell.

Board considers texts, tests and routes to school

By Sarah Miller

In its work session meeting on Tuesday April 29, the NPS Board of Education heard committee presentations on Safe Routes to School, math textbook adoption recommendations, and school test data.

Denise Barengo, executive director of Nome Eskimo Community, and Nicole McCullough of WHPacific, the Anchorage engineering firm that has been working with NEC to implement the Safe Routes to School program, shared task force findings with the Board.

The task force, compiled of community organizations such as NEC, PTA, NSHC, and the City of Nome, began its information gathering phase last fall with monthly meetings, surveys, parking lot audits, and observations of morning traffic patterns as students were brought to the elementary school. The task force gathered data about safety, speed, weather, space, and traffic flow.

"Really, the gist of this program is to encourage more kids walking and biking to school, because it's healthier," commented McCullough, explaining that one of the objectives of the information gathering phase was to determine factors that are preventing children from walking and biking to school. These factors included weather, traffic speed and safety, the space and conditions on city roads, loose animals, and dust.

Because the elementary school parking lot was found to be a "disaster", explained McCullough, the task force created six alternate drop-off routes for students arriving by bus, family vehicles, or on foot. Task force recommendations also included suggestions for engineering solutions for lighting, intersection markers, and addressing snowdrift and plowing issues.

Enforcement recommendations included enforcement of the city's loose dog regulations, crossing guards at intersections, police monitoring of traffic areas near the school during morning drop-off times, and enforcement of school zone speed limits. Community education regarding road safety and encouragement of the use of reflective gear, headlamps, and organized walking and biking groups were also on the list of suggestions. However, the committee stopped short of a final decision when too few participants attended its February meeting.

McCullough explained that the next step is for a "champion" to step forward and spearhead continued efforts to implement the recommendations. She also shared that NEC has received funding from the Federal Highway Administration to create a similar safety plan for the entire community of Nome, which will help raise awareness around the elementary school safety project.

Superintendent Steve Gast commented that next steps would also need to include community education. "You can reconfigure the parking lots any way you want, but it's teaching the folks which way to go and how to do it that's critical. Education is a big part of what has to take place," he said.

Betsy Brennan, school board president, asked what cooperation would be needed from the city or state authorities to implement the task force's recommendations regarding school zones, street signage, and lighting. Depending on what type of roads would be impacted, the approval and implementation of these changes would most likely require the city and state to work together, said McCullough. She recommended the Board consult with Steve Soenksen, with the Alaska Department of Transportation in Juneau, for assistance in the program's next steps.

Next to present were teachers from the Elementary School's math textbook adoption committee. The teachers opened with an explanation of the new education standards for the state of Alaska that closely resemble those known as the "Common Core" standards, which are slated to become the official new standards for Alaska's public schools on July 1. Beginning in the upcoming academic year, SBA (Standards Based Assessments) tests will consist of material from these standards.

In order to adequately prepare students to meet the new standards, as well as to assist teachers in ensuring that the content they present to students is aligned with them, the time is right to adopt a new math textbook. "The standards have changed. The testing has changed. How we teach math has changed- we teach fewer strands more deeply. We have utilized our current math textbook for eight years, but it doesn't help us teach at the deeper levels we want to achieve," explained Mary Jo Hazel, first grade teacher.

A new language arts curriculum was also on the calendar for adoption, but early on, the committee decided to evaluate one subject area at a time, focusing on math. However, rather than recommend a textbook to the school board for purchase for the upcoming school year, the committee presented a much different proposal.

The committee recommended tabling a new textbook purchase for an additional year, suggesting instead a proposal to partner with Bering Straits School District in its textbook review process. BSSD is currently undergoing a comprehensive curriculum review process, which is funded by a $1.5 million grant and is guided by experts in curriculum and assessment, in effort to align all its instructional materials with the new state standards.

"BSSD is willing to share its professional research and findings with Nome Public Schools, with no further commitments for adoption," explained Rick Leistiko, third grade teacher. "We can take their research and use it to determine what we want. We could potentially be aligned not only with the Alaska standards, but also with school districts around the state."

The proposal suggested funding travel and substitute teacher costs for two teachers from NES to travel to Unalakleet four times during the school year to participate in curriculum meetings with BSSD. The teachers would then bring information and findings back to the staff at NES to assist in

While the partnership does not require NPS to select the same math textbook guiding the local decision for math textbook adoption. as BSSD, if the districts did select the same materials, an added benefit would be the leverage of buying power from two districts to reduce the overall cost of the new textbooks. As another advantage, if the two districts were to adopt the same curriculum, the result would be a more streamlined, consistent education for the high number of students who transfer between the districts.

Even if the districts select different textbooks, the partnership stands to benefit all students, explained Leistiko. "All of Nome's students

How to teach your kids to save: Five tips for parents

By Tyler Hull

Do you want to set your kids up for future financial success? Then start now. That's the first rule of introducing your kids to financial education – the sooner you start, the better. Money management is probably the last thing on the minds of most kids – if it even registers at all – but there are concrete steps you can take as a parent to help ensure that your children know how to think about money, including the importance of saving for the future. If you plant those seeds with care, they'll take root, and your children will be much more likely to achieve financial success later in life.

So what lessons can we give today's children and young adults to prepare them for financial success in the future? Today's kids are much more likely to spend rather than save. Even parents who try to teach their children about finances, such as by giving them a regular allowance, might find their lessons overshadowed by stronger messages that come from advertising, or from children's peers. Unfortunately, by the time most young people graduate from high school, they know all about spending and very little about saving or spending wisely.

Consider these facts:
• American teenagers spend most of their income – about 21% – on clothing, followed by food (18%); accessories and personal care (10%); shoes (9%); carrelated expenses (8%); electronics (8%); music and movies (7%); video games (6%); concerts and events (6%); other expenses (3%); books (2%); furniture (2%). (Source: Piper Jaffray, 2013)

• Most students devote about one half or more of their earnings to discretionary spending on relatively shortterm wants and needs. (Source: University of Michigan Institute for Social Research, 2014)

• Teenagers spend about $100 billion a year, and children under 12 spend $11 billion a year, of their own money. They influence 75%, or approximately $165 billion, of their parents' money. (Source: Answers.com, 2014)

This past April, thousands of bankers, including many from Wells Fargo, connected with kids in classrooms and after-school programs across the country during the annual American Bankers Association's Teach Children to Save Day. These efforts help young people take an important first step in mastering their financial ABCs.

Five Tips for Parents

Parents play a crucial role in their children's financial success later in life. Here are five tips for parents from Wells Fargo:

- 1. Start early Before they even start school, children begin to understand the process of managing money
- 2. Set goals Have children write down things they want and what they cost. Teach them about making choices and saving
- 3. Pay a Modest Allowance Just a small amount can help children learn
- 4. Make a budget Start with three categories: spend, save, give
- 5. Use Free Resources Check out your local library and the Hands on Banking website at www.handson-banking.org for interactive lessons on saving, budgeting, credit, and more.
- A tip for children ages 3-7: Take three jars and label them separately: Spend, Save, Give. Help the children split up their money into each jar and watch it grow as they save and disappear as they spend.

  A tip for pre-teens, ages 8-12: Create a short-term
- A tip for pre-teens, ages 8-12: Create a short-term savings box. Have the pre-teens choose something they want (a brand name pair of shoes or a video game system). They will learn the value of savings when they save enough to purchase the item.

A tip for teens, ages 13 and up: Open a savings account for long-term savings. Have teens save a certain percentage for a few years to make a bigger purchase.

Parents should ask their banker for more ideas and advice. Their child's long-term financial security is at stake. By starting early, they can help their child develop good financial habits that will last a lifetime.

Ice miners and equipment rescued from drifting floe

By Diana Haecker

Gambling that the sea ice might hold just a little bit longer, the ice mining crew of the "Lazy Gator" mining outfit found itself in a dangerous situation when the ice broke off and left them stranded on the wrong side, along with their equipment and vehicles.

The crew consisting of Cameron Stiles, Reese Madden, George Lewis, Joe Fullwood, Jesse Strickling and Dwight Amaktoolik were a quarter mile offshore, six miles west of town on West Beach, when sea ice break-up caught up with them.

Cameron Stiles, 26, said the crew had decided to break down their ice mining camp on Sunday, April 27. For that purpose, they drove two pickup trucks, two side-by-sides and one four-wheeler out onto the ice to be able to haul all of their equipment off the ice.

"We decided to pull the plug on our ice mining that day," said Stiles. "I was the only one with the urgency who wanted to get the sluice box, shack, and everything, off the ice as soon as possible, but the others wanted to continue cleaning up the gold on the ice there."

Stiles loaded up equipment in his 2500 Chevy Silverado truck and Dwight Amaktoolik followed with the four-wheeler towing the mining shack and the hot water boiler towards shore.

Not far from where they started, they ran into a 10-15-feet wide gap of open water between them and the shore. "Dwight said 'This water wasn't here earlier' and I got out of the truck and saw it was open water," Stiles remembered.

They followed the lead further west, but couldn't find any crossing possibilities. Stiles went back to his crew and reported to his crew that they were stranded. "I told them to load up fast and that we needed to look for a way to cross the lead.

'We panicked for about 30 minutes," he said. The rest of the crew packed up their operation quickly and drove to the edge of the ice.

According to Nome Volunteer Fire Department Search and Rescue Captain Jim West Jr., a fire department volunteer received a text message from one of the miners stating their predicament.

NVFD notified the Alaska State Troopers and Nome Police dispatch. Bering Air was also notified to be on standby with a helicopter at the ready. SAR volunteers were toned out around 4 p.m.

In the meantime, Cameron Stiles was able to call his mother on his cell phone. She in turn notified Darrin Otton, who launched his small aircraft and flew along the coast in hopes to find a spot where the sea ice was still connected to the shore fast ice. He didn't find such a spot. "He was our eyes in the sky and texted us from the air that he couldn't find a safe crossing," Stiles said. Joe Fullwood got into his wetsuit and swam across the lead to the beach to get his boat.

SAR volunteers drove their vehicles on the beach and launched an inflatable boat to retrieve the miners off the ice floe. According to West, two other boats came to the rescue as well.

The miners found a floating iceberg and pushed their side-by-sides and the four-wheeler onto the berg. Another boat, with Ben Piscoya, Ian Alvanna-Stimpfle and Katherine Pomrenke showed up and pushed the iceberg "barge" towards shore where the vehicles could be driven onto safer ice and onto the beach.

SAR volunteers retrieved Cameron Stiles and George Lewis off the ice. But once everybody was safely off the ice, the two remaining pickup trucks were no longer a consideration for SAR.

"Everybody told us we should kiss our trucks good-bye," said Stiles. This was a bitter pill to swallow. Stiles said both Lewis and he needed the trucks for their families' transportation. Coincidently, Stiles' girlfriend was in labor with their first son, in Anchorage at that time.

The next day, the crew devised a plan to get the trucks off by using another 'ice barge'

They went out there with a tiny inflatable 6.6 horsepower dingy, three ice augers and a plan. They wanted to cut off an iceberg, use it as an ice barge and push it to shore. The plan didn't work out as they thought as they could not cut loose a sheet of ice, but an iceberg soon came drifting towards them. They corralled the berg, cut it so it fit the ice edge and drove their two trucks on it.

They were floating on this little ice barge, pushed by the small dingy towards shore, until the iceberg hit the ocean bottom with still a gap between the berg and the safe ice on shore. They waited for the tide to come in, but another ice sheet was floating towards them and time was of the essence to get off the iceberg or be crushed. "We were in a race against time," said Stiles. "As soon as the ice hit, it pushed us in and we had a small window of opportunity to get off the berg before it piled up on us," said Stiles. Stiles and Lewis sat in their trucks and gunned it. They used two small floating pieces of ice as a bridge and miraculously made it to safety. The same day, Stiles said, his son was born in Anchorage.

"My girlfriend told me that the nurse turned on the TV in her room and there I was on the news driving our truck off the ice," Stiles said.

Nobody was injured and no equipment was left on the ice. Also, no oil spill was reported to the authorities.

According to SAR Captain Jim West Jr., a truck with another ice mining outfit did go through the ice. However, DEC officials say they did not receive a report.

The Dept. of Public Safety via Trooper Sgt. Charlie Cross and the Nome SAR's West said that they were only concerned with the safety of the miners and don't usually get involved in equipment rescue.

The Dept. of Environmental Conservation permits ice mining, authorizing medium suction dredges under a general permit for wastewater. The DEC's spill response team gets involved once there is a release of petroleum products into the sea environment. DEC Environmental program specialist Ashley Adamczek said her division did not get a direct report on the incident, but an official with the Dept. of Natural Resources, which is the main agency to hand out mining permits, called to ask if the DEC had received any information.

Adamczek said a spill on land is reportable when one gallon or more of petroleum product is spilled; in the ocean, any amount of oil or hazardous material is immediately reportable.

Allen Nakanishi with the DEC's water division says the main focus of the DEC's permit is to regulate point source water discharge from the sluice boxes and not oil and grease.

In regards to the upcoming mining season, Nakanishi said there is an interagency public meeting planned for the beginning of June in Nome. He said this would be a good opportunity for miners and other ocean users to bring issues to the table for all involved agencies to hear.

BSSD students win medals at State NYO

By Jeffrey Erickson

Bering Strait School District Native Youth Olympic athletes have historically done exceptionally well in statewide competitions. However, with the graduation of some remarkable athletes in 2013 there were questions about whether that previous success would continue.

Returning medalists Apaay Campbell (4-time and world record holder in Kneel Jump) and Jonisha Wilson (Toe kick) were likely repeat medalists but the rest of the team they did.

Campbell got things going with a dominant performance as she crushed the hopes of the field with her powerful leaps. She didn't break her own record, but easily won her fifth consecutive title. No other medalists on the first day put a top-5 team placement at risk.

Friday's events started with the powerful Eskimo Stick Pull, usually dominated by larger, strong athletes.

Teller's James Isabell and Jazzlyn Garnie pulled well. Isabell finished just off the podium with a solid performance. The Toe Kick followed and BSSD came back with a bang. Unalakleet's Wilson exceeded her personal best and won the girls event and Teller's Cameron Okbaok opened eyes with an amazing kick of 94" - twenty inches further than he'd gone before.

He placed second behind the world record holder from Unalaska.

The final day opened with the Indian Stick pull where things are always a little "slippery". It's hard to figure results when dealing with a greased stick but the BSSD coaches felt good about their chances.

Shishmaref's Debra Hersrud had done well in 2013 although not medaling and she quickly showed that she wanted to be a factor in her final year. She pushed and pulled her way to the final group and ended up

Golovin's Charlie Ningeulook was experienced, this being his 3rd time to State, and quietly dominated his matches. He ran into Forest Strick, the favorite, in the quarterfieasy win. He finished his run with two more victories and was crowned champion.

One Foot High Kick is probably the premier event of the games for sheer athleticism. Okbaok showed his potential as he stayed with the high-fliers and, again, exceeded his own expectations as he achieved a personal best and 4th place.

And finally, the event closed with the traditional last event, the Seal Hop. Unalakleet's Aucha Johnson had faced some adversity in the past and was determined to persevere for a possible win. He was prepared but this event is the most noted for potential mishaps due to judge rulings and this time was no different. Johnson went out strong but was called for missing the turnaround line and, with the extra energy needed to return to the line, could not hop the furthest, settling for 4th place.

The BSSD team had returned to the elite group as a team. They placed fifth overall and also received the Academic Award.

CLASSES SHOW THEIR METAL IN A SILVER/COPPER FUND RAISER—Recently our classmate and student Ethan "Bubba" McDaniel needed to transfer to Anchorage to be closer to his brother Jens and family. The Spirit Club and individuals at Nome-Beltz wanted to raise funds to help Ethan, Jens and their family. We started a Copper/Silver War, which included several boys who would shave their heads if their class lost. Representing the staff were Mr. Frost and Mr. Weaver, seniors were Jake Stettenbenz and Tyler Eide, juniors were Emery Booshu and Oliver Hoogendorn, and the sophomores had many, including Clay Outwater, Dylan Pomrenke, and Alec Johnson; the freshmen shaving was left to only Wilson Hoogendorn. On the last day of the Silver/Copper War, hefty donations put the seniors in the losing place. However, since the students had filled the staff can with over $600, Mr. Frost and Mr. Weaver both agreed to shave their heads as a reward to students for the good work. Overall, the students and staff raised $1,500 and expect more from a silent auction currently taking place. The students participated with enthusiasm and are really happy and excited about the helping hand that they have lent towards the boys and their family. #### Golovin students take to the stage, Elim students create stained glass

By Christina Carrick and Annette Courson

With two weeks of the school year left, spring fever has definitely set in at Golovin's Martin L. Olson School as students are anxiously awaiting summer.

Luckily, to help students channel their energy in a positive and productive manner, a special Artist in Residence has joined them. Their featured artist, Elizabeth Nelson, focuses on performing arts. She will be spending the last two weeks of school working with all students, pre-kindergarten through 12th grade on theatre, creative movement and improvisation.

Golovin Lynx big and small will be able to display their newly gained skills through a final performance in the second week. The students will be adapting the children's book, Kumak's House, A Tale of the Far North, by Michael Bania into a play. The story is set in an Inupiat Eskimo village where Kumak and his family are not happy.

The comical story follows Kumak as he seeks out advice from elder

Lulu time and time again. The performance will be held at the school on Wednesday, May 14 at 5 p.m. and will be followed by a potluck. Martin L. Olson students and staff invite members of the community are invited to come watch and have some laughs.

Elim welcomed Jim Kaiser, a stain glass artist, as part of the Artist in Residence Program on April 21, Jim worked with students to create stained glass projects. Projects include cutting shapes, making stars, making independent designs and masks. The students enjoyed learning how to cut glass and connect the pieces of their projects together using solder.

He met with the community and staff to explain what he does and what he worked with the students on. The students and teachers displayed their work at community night, Thursday, May 1, 2014.

These residencies were made possible through the generous funding from the Alaska State Council on the Arts, the Alaska State Legislature, the National Endowment for the Arts (a federal agency), the Rasmuson Foundation, and the Bering Strait School District.

Greetings to everyone in House District 39. I hope this finds everyone in good spirits with the arrival of spring. I was just in Savoonga and Gambell, and there was much excitement with the landing of a whale on the south side of the island. I'd like to wish much luck to all the spring hunters, and please remember safety first.

The Alaska Legislature adjourned the 28th session with 744 bills and resolutions introduced and 268 passed by both the House and Senate. The following are bills that either directly impacted our district or were significant at the statewide level.

EDUCATION: The omnibus education package turned out to be a highly contentious issue because there were very different views on how much should be spent on education and what programs should be funded. In the House alone there were 40 separate opinions, and this was complicated by the fact that whatever the House could agree on had to be reconciled with the Senate's package. Some folks wanted to see more student performance before additional funds were approved. My philosophy has been that our rural schools face higher costs and unique challenges compared to other parts of the state, and therefore I favor strong funding for our schools. This year the legislature added $100 million to education for each of the next three years. While nobody got everything they wanted I think that overall it was a good package. Here are the highlights of the education

•Base Student Allocation (BSA): Currently schools receive $5,680 per student. We added $150 to this year's BSA, $50 to next year's BSA, and $50 to the following year. Some wanted funds to be included "outside the BSA." That would have been considered "one-time funding." Because that is a less reliable form of funding (and creates uncertainty for administrators and teachers) the majority of us supported funding that went "inside the BSA."

•Rural School Funding: There was an attempt to increase large school funding without a corresponding increase for small schools. We in the Bush Caucus were strongly opposed to this, and that disparity was removed in the final version of the bill.

• Residential Schools: The legislature improved formula funding for residential schools. This is good for the Northwest Arctic Career and Technical Center (NACTEC) and the Galena Interior Learning Academy (GILA). NACTEC and GILA will see an increase from $1,184 to $1,776 per student.

• Technical Vocational Education Program (TVEP): This program funds our vocational schools, and it was up for reauthorization this year. There was some concern that vocational schools not currently listed in the formula would be added, and this could have had the effect of reducing the share received by other vocational schools already in the formula. While Illisagvik College in Barrow was added the reauthorization was drafted so that neither NACTEC nor GILA were affected.

•High School Qualifying Exam (HSQE): This graduation requirement was removed because parents and teachers across the state felt that children were being taught to take the test at the expense of receiving a well-rounded education. A provision was also added to let students who previously failed all or part of the HSQE to get their diplomas retroactively if they otherwise meet the school districts requirements.

• Internet: A program was created to increase internet speeds to 10 megabits in schools that are located in economically challenged (and largely rural) schools.

• Science, Technology, Engineering, and Math (STEM): This pilot program is directed to middle schools and is being compared to the successful Alaska Native Science and Engineering Program (ANSEP). If proven effective it could be expanded to a statewide level.

• Mill Rate: An attempt was made to increase local education contributions from 2.65 mills to 2.8 mils. I did not favor this increase. If enacted it would have increased the tax burden to Nome residents by $56,000. Since most villages do not have taxing authority this would not have affected them.

• Funding Studies: Partly due to inflation and changing demographics new studies will be conducted to address salary & benefits, school design & construction, district cost factors, and school size factors.

• Home Schools: School districts with participating correspondence students can count those kids towards their "average daily membership (count)" at a 90% rate instead of 80%. This could put up to an additional $6 million into the home school program.

• Tax Credits: A provision to allow for tax credits to pay for private and religious textbooks was passed.

• Vouchers: While not a part of the education bill, it's worth noting that legislation had been introduced to allow for a constitutional amendment to allow public education funds to be given to private and religious schools. We heard from all parts of House District 39, and the opinion was strong opposition to vouchers. The bill did not receive enough support to be put to a vote.

HB77 Water Reservations: This bill was introduced with the intent of streamlining the permitting process for development projects (such as mining). However, it was met with great resistance when individuals and tribes were removed as being eligible to apply for water reservations (for example to provide for enough water for salmon). I voted against this bill last year, and there was some concern that it might resurface this year. Despite various fixes (individuals were added back as being eligible to apply for water reservations) the bill still could not muster enough support to make it out of the Senate Resources Committee.

Alaska Native Languages: After some challenging moments a bill to include Alaska Native Languages as official languages of the state (in addition to English) was passed with widespread support. The only other state to recognize indigenous languages is Hawaii. There was some concern that if enacted it would require that public messages be printed in both English and the local language. This is not the case. While many agree that this bill is largely symbolic it is also a bill that has a great deal of meaning for many people. We heard public testimony about how Alaska Natives were discouraged and punished for speaking their native tongue. The passage of this bill is an official statement of public support for our Alaska Native languages, and I was proud to see it

Arctic Infrastructure Fund: This bill was passed and allows the Alaska Industrial Development & Export Authority (AIDEA) to provide low interest loans for arctic infrastructure. The Bering Strait is seeing a dramatic increase in ship activity due to oil exploration, tourism, research, and shipping through the Northwest Passage (over Canada) and the Northern Sea Route (over Russia). It is expected that many billions of dollars in infrastructure will be needed, and the State of Alaska's Arctic Infrastructure Fund is just a first step

VPSO Guns: This bill was sponsored by Rep Bryce Edgmon (Dillingham) and was introduced after an unarmed VPSO in his district was shot and killed. Folks who were opposed to the bill felt that the risk outweighed the benefits if VPSOs were not trained to the high standards that others were. For those of us who supported the bill we felt that residents of rural Alaska should be given the same level of protection afforded by law enforcement in other parts of the state. If this means that we need to spend funds to properly train our VPSOs, then it is money well spent.

Voter ID: This bill failed but is worth noting that it would have required everyone to present a photo ID when voting. I opposed this bill because of the challenges that folks in our villages would have faced. There are no Department of Motor Vehicle (DMV) offices in our villages to get identification cards. For those who had gotten an ID card in the past there are some who have lost their cards. Or those cards have expired. Many people haven't been to a hub in 10 or 20 years. One possible fix was to include tribal ID cards. But a lot of people move to other villages and cannot easily get an ID card when they are turned away at a polling center. For those of us from rural Alaska we argued that in these small villages everyone knows everyone. And in Alaska voter fraud is simply not a problem that necessitates potentially turning away eligi-

Capital & Operating Budget: This year's numbers are a reflection of a difficult reality that we face, and that is we are now in deficit spending. Much of this is due to falling oil production. In the 1980s we saw two million barrels of oil flow thru the pipeline per day. Today that number is around 600,000 barrels per day. And it's been dropping at a rate of 6 percent per year. Taxes and royalties on oil account for 93 percent of the state's income, and so oil production declines have a large impact on our state. In addition, operating budgets have been increasing at a rate of 6 percent per year. My philosophy has been that cuts should not be made disproportionately on rural Alaska. In fact, cuts should be minimized in rural Alaska because many of our needs are basic and fall within the core of government functions including life, safety, and health. Water and sewer is still an issue for many small communities. We have poor infrastructure. And a wide range of prosteering with the paddle, while the boat was towed by six dogs, tended by a young man and woman, walking together. At 12:45 we reached the roadhouse near Cape Nome, remaining there until 2:30, so as to give the horses a proper rest. It was from Cape Nome that the district obtained its name; on the western side of the cape we abandoned the road and took to the beach, riding along the shore for 10 miles, as far as Fort Davis.

The tide is out and the firm wet sand affords excellent footing. Our horses are willing and full of life, emulous to keep ahead, so that they move gladly. Tony will not be denied, maintaining a fast trot as if he had just come out of his stable. The cold wind blows from Bering Sea, the breakers curl to the shore, the horse treads on the silver fringe of the waves as they ripple over the sandy beach; the strong pulsating movement of the noble animal, the exhilaration of an air fresh as the breath of dawn, the feeling of perfect freedom and unlimited expansiveness, a sense of complete well-being and gay adventure, touch every tingling nerve and stimulate every willing muscle, until I shout with delight. It is well for a brief space to feel like a Viking when the world was young, as if the complexities of civilization had been swept away by the cold breath of the sea, as if money and business, steam and electricity, factories and libraries, no longer existed, while the tide of life fills every corner with exultant joy.

At Fort Davis we had to return to the road, for the beach was being mined for gold, but it was only three miles to Nome. Although we had ridden 43 miles in 5½ hours of actual travel our horses were still unwearied, which is further evidence of the invigorating nature of this Northern atmosphere. We rattled down the planked way of the long Front Street, and dismounted at the Wild Goose office at 4:30. After a change and a bath we made tracks for the Royal Café and there celebrated the termination of a glorious trip by dining on wild goose and reindeer stew, washed down with a bottle of Californian burgundy, followed by the smoke that makes all men brothers.

Shoulder pain: How to regain pain free movement

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

No joint in the body is as mobile as the shoulder. Most joints bend and extend. The shoulder, with a complex collection of muscles and ligaments, can rotate through an arc of almost 360 degrees without popping out of place. This complexity allows human beings to throw, pull, swing, push, lift, and embrace. The only limit to the shoulder's reach, in most people, is a small area on the upper back.

The shoulder is a ball-and-socket type of joint. The muscles that surround and move the shoulder form a sheath called the rotator cuff. A tightly woven network of ligaments holds the shoulder in place.

Complex systems with multiple moving parts are prone to problems. The shoulder is no exception. Pain in the shoulder may result from a tear in the muscles, called a rotator cuff tear, or from inflammation of the tendons in the shoulder, called tendonitis. Arthritis ball-and-socket joint of the shoulder may also cause long-term pain.

Sudden pain in the shoulder associated with an injury should be medically evaluated as soon as possible. Sometimes other diseases cause shoulder pain. Therefore, pain associated with heart symptoms, upper abdominal pain, or high fever should always be evaluated by a doctor.

However, if you experience shoulder pain that is less severe, perhaps associated with a recent change in activity or increase in lifting, there are several things you can try before going DOCTOR to the doctor.

First, rest the shoulder from any activity that causes or worsens the pain. Second, use an anti-inflammatory medication like naproxen (Aleve) or ibuprofen (Advil, Motrin) to help with pain and reduce underlying inflammation. Third, apply ice or a cold pack to the shoulder for 15 minutes at a time throughout the day. Ice applied to an injured joint is an excellent anti-inflammatory treatment and often helps with pain. A bag of frozen peas also works great for this purpose. Always place a thin cloth be-prevent injury to the skin. Finally, begin range of motion exercises when tolerated. The two tween the cold pack and skin to most important exercises are called "pendulum swings" and "wall walking."

A person performs pendulum swings by leaning slightly forward allowing the arm to dangle toward the floor. Gently swing the arm back and forth in all directions for 30-60 seconds. Some people find making the shapes of the letters of the alphabet is helpful. Weight may be added as tolerated in the form of small dumbbells or household objects like canned food or partially filled milk

Wall walking involves stretching the shoulder muscles and ligaments by using the fingers to walk up the face of a wall. The exercise is first performed facing the wall with the arm extended forward using the fingers to increasingly reach higher on the wall. Always stop if there is pain. Later, when tolerated, the arm may be extended out to the side walking up the wall until the arm is fully extended above the head.

Relative rest, ice, medication, and proper stretching will resolve most minor shoulder pain within a week

See your doctor if shoulder pain does not respond to these simple steps. People who do not respond to conservative therapies may respond to steroid injections into the shoulder region. Magnetic Resonance Excluding a transfer for the state retirement system the operating expenditures went from about $10.5 billion for FY14 to $9.3 billion for FY15. The vast majority of those cuts came from the state general fund, which dropped from $6.4 billion to $5.2 billion in the same period. It is not shocking that we saw cuts of this magnitude in light of the deficits the state is facing. I think we can expect either to hold this level of spending or expect more cuts in the future. Capital expenditures topped $2.2 billion for FY15 and included several big-ticket projects. That's only slightly down from last year's $2.3 billion. However when you look at what was spent out of the state's general fund you see a very different story. Last year that portion of the capital budget was just over $1 billion. This year it's under $670 million. Below are some funding

Dean John Pushruk 12/21/56 - 4/19/14

Dean John Pushruk was born to Marie and Fred Pushruk, Sr. on December 21, 1956. He suddenly and unexpectedly died on April 19, 2014.

Being the oldest of eight siblings, Dean was definitely the big brother of the family. He always spoke his mind and was always willing to give a helping hand. He loved all of his family and made many friends throughout his years. Dean always expressed his love for his children, stepchildren, and grandchildren. He was a very proud Dad and Papa, always talking about his kids and grandkids.

Dean recently moved back to Nome and took a job driving for Checker Cab Co. Before moving to Nome, he lived in White Mountain, where he was an active member of the community. Throughout the years, he's worked with White Mountain Volunteer Fire Department, Search and Rescue, Pee Wee Basketball, and various other jobs including heavy equipment operator and volunteer trail staking. Shortly after his son, Jon Dean, passed away he became very active in suicide prevention and was voted Non-Member of the Year by the White Mountain IRA. Dean enjoyed volunteering and helping in any way he was able. He enjoyed helping elders and also volunteered for Lonnie O'Connor Iditarod Basketball Classic.

Along with Dean's nature to help out, he also had hobbies in which he took pleasure. Dean enjoyed hunting and fishing, making fly hooks, visiting family and friends, and playing pool. He always had a great time going on hunting trips with friends and was always willing to share his catch. He was always kind to others and always put others before himself. Dean also had a great sense of humor: he always made people laugh by teasing and joking around.

Dean is survived by his sons; Mickey, Kris, and Sam; sisters Diane, Stella, and Brenda; brothers Jimmy and Roy; step-daughter Melissa; step-son Michael Wongittilin, many grandchildren, step-dad James, numerous cousins, aunts, uncles, nephews, nieces, and friends.

Saying it Sincerely

By Rev. Ross Tozzi St. Joseph Catholic Church Member Nome Ministerial Society

Spring: A Time for Resurrection and Transformation

All around us we see signs of spring, the snow is melting, the days are longer the, temperatures are warming. Spring is our annual reminder that after the darkness comes light, or more precisely, after death comes life; life

Like the disciples of Jesus, we are very sad when someone dear to us passes away, or even when they become very ill and we fear that we will lose them. And perhaps we are like the disciples who found it hard to believe that Jesus had risen from the dead. Whenever we visit the cemetery, the graves are always covered with the earth and were we to go and find an empty grave we would believe that someone had moved the body.

What a joyful surprise for the first witnesses who had their sorrow turned to ecstatic joy. Jesus returned from the dead to help them understand the mystery of his passion and death. Just imagine the resurrection through the eyes of Mary. Her heart pierced by a sword as she watched her son crucified on Good Friday, but now she rejoices that her son has risen from the dead and reappears time and time again throughout the Easter season. If Jesus rises than so too do her mother Anna and her father Joachim. All of her relatives, all of those who have been faithful to God, even though they have died, are able to rise to new life in Christ.

Just as it did for Mary, the resurrection of Jesus calls us to a new way of life. Throughout the 40 days of Lent we have been called to sacrifice so that we may enjoy with fuller hearts the unimaginable good news that Jesus Christ has risen from the dead. Perhaps we have lost a loved one this past year and life without them has been so much more difficult. Perhaps our hearts were pierced by a sword as we have watched someone we love suffer from illness or some other tragedy. The suffering and death of Jesus was not without a point, and the suffering of our loved ones, accepted in faith, can have a redeeming value as well. A year ago, I watched my father die a painful death, and yet out of his sacrifice, I have witnessed a deepening of faith for family members, and a newness of spirit that gives witness to the resurrection by the transformation of darkness to new life. If Jesus rises then so too do our mothers and fathers, and all of the relatives who have reached out to God to accept his mercy, forgiveness, and love.

All around us we see signs of spring. With Easter we celebrate the resurrection of Jesus, the forgiveness of sins, and the promise of eternal life. And let us never forget that this annual reminder is reinforced every week. Every Sunday is a day in which we celebrate the rising of Christ to new life. Every new sunrise is a day in which the Lord continues to offer to transform our lives.

will benefit from the selection of materials that are aligned with the new standards. We can make a much more informed decision on curriculum with the availability of professionals who are trained in curriculum development."

The committee plans to be able to present a recommendation to the board for the purchase of new math materials in spring of 2015. Hazel addressed the issue of needing new instructional materials sooner rather than later. "If urgency is the issue, why should we wait? Because this is a really long-term decision. We're going to have this math program for possibly the next seven to eight years. We didn't get all the samples we wanted. We don't feel like we've been able to investigate all the options."

Superintendent Gast asked whether BSSD had undergone a similar alignment process for its language arts curriculum, and whether the district would be willing to share this information with Nome Public Schools. Leistiko agreed to follow up on this issue.

Board member Barb Nickels questioned whether all teachers would consistently use the same textbook after going through the process of curriculum review and adoption. Hazel pointed out that with an aligned curriculum, teachers would have less need to supplement or "patch" holes in instructional materials in order to meet educational standards. "It's the principal's job to ensure consistency," commented Brennan. "This proposal is a great idea but I would like to see an instructional leader involved, meaning the principal, since we don't have a curriculum specialist on staff."

Next to present was high school math teacher Andre Van Delden. Van Delden, who has been teaching math at the high school for eighteen years, has been using math textbooks published as early as 1989. "There was no need to change. We've kept the same curriculum for a very long time. However, Common Core has pushed us to finally look at new materials. We are teaching these standards at an earlier age," said Van Delden.

After reviewing several samples from textbook publishers, Van Delden and junior high math teacher Hana Jones recommended a 6-12 math textbook published by Glencoe-McGraw Hill, to carry students through Algebra II. The recommended program includes access to an online assessment and targeted review program to provide intervention to struggling students.

The high school math committee also recommended the purchase of Cengage for Trigonometry and Personal Finance math classes. Jones stressed the importance of consistency in vocabulary and math instruction in junior high to better prepare students for high school

Van Delden also pointed out the cost advantage of their recommendation, which prices consumable student books at approximately $14.00 per book and allows for annual updates and revisions, rather than a set of hardback textbooks that the district would have to keep for at least six years, which would cost the district over $100 to replace if lost or damaged. The cost projection would allow the district to purchase enough extra consumable textbooks to allow students to use one in school and keep one at home. Nickels commented, "I'm certainly a big proponent of purchasing extra books to allow students to take their books home so that they can have a parent or older brother or sister help them with their math.

Janeen Sullivan was next to present, sharing winter session test data from the elementary, middle, and high schools with the School Board. Students K-10 were tested in reading and math, grades 2-10 in writing, and grades 7-10 in science. Students in all grades, in all subjects tested, made gains between fall and winter session, with the exception of 10th grade students in writing, which dropped by less than one

However, the gains were not enough to offset the percentile data, which reveals that in most of the grades and subject areas, the majority of NPS students are failing to meet district targets for proficiency. Seventh grade scores were particularly low, with 91 percent of students scoring below targets in math. 80 percent below in reading, and 77 percent below proficient in writing. Sullivan pointed out that charter school students were not reflected in the scores for fifth through seventh grade students.

"We needed to have attacked this yesterday," commented Nickels. "This is critical. We need something in place for these far-below proficient students as soon as possible, when school starts in the fall." Sullivan also explained that with the changes in SBA's due to new educational standards, districts across the state have been warned to expect lower test scores among students as teachers and students adjust to new instructional expectations. "With the changes to the state standards, expect a 30-60 percent drop in proficiency levels on the new tests," Sullivan said.

Gast commented, "This demonstrates how important it is to catch

NEC reports to U.S. Housing & Urban Develop

students in the early grades, pre-K through third grade. It gets more difficult to catch them up as they get older. That's one reason I like the idea of being cautious with our elementary curriculum selection because it has such an important and powerful impact on learning." In math, the grades with the largest number of students testing at proficiency level were the fourth and sixth grades, with 48 percent and 57 percent of students reaching targets respectively. Fifth grade scores dipped sharply, with 26 percent of students at proficiency. In the subject area of reading, only 42 percent of Kindergarten students reached proficiency, still higher than the 23 percent of first graders, 37 percent of second graders, and 38 percent of third graders attaining this goal. With these low scores in the primary grades, Brennan emphasized, "We really need to protect our numbers- the student to teacher ratios— in those early grades.' The work session then ended as the Board convened in a Special Meeting to address an action item, the approval of a Memorandum of Agreement with the Superintendent. Gast requested in the MOA payment of $6750 in return for additional duties he has performed in the absence of a district Human Resources Director since March. Board member Barb Amarok stated her opinion that the terms were too low, and that a higher rate of payment would be appropriate for the extra time put in by Gast, and Paula Davis concurred. Brennan stated she was comfortable with the figure requested in the MOA, and had consulted with the

On May 1, at approximately 10:20 p.m., Clinton Booshu, 58, of Gambell was arrested after investigation by the VPSO revealed that he had family member. It was also determined that Clinton Booshu was in violation of his school district's lawyer who indicated that the terms and amount of the MOA were reasonable.

Nickels was not in favor of the MOA, stating, "In fifteen years, I've seen every one of our past Superintendents have to take over the duties of additional positions. The days listed do include days on leave, days on holiday, and non-working days, and since we're paying a daily rate...our superintendents are wellpaid, they receive free housing, they are salaried at eight hour days minimum, the duties listed on this MOA are actually the duties of the superintendent, and at this time, with our district in a budget deficit, I would vote no on the MOA as it stands."

Amarok pointed out that the responsibilities of the Human Resources director are not actually on the Superintendent's job description. "To say that we expect the Superintendent to have to take over the responsibilities of other positions is not what he lined up for. It's not what any Superintendent would line up for. These duties are extra, not what he is responsible for every single day," said Amarok.

Brennan moved for an MOA that would compensate Gast at a daily rate of $75, for a total of days between March 1 and June 30 that would not include vacation days, in a total amount that would equal between $6000-7000. The motion was seconded and approved by the board, by a vote of three in favor and one opposed. Nickels said in discussion that she would like to see a policy set by the board to deal with similar future situations.

Common Council approves water and sewer fee hike

By Diana Haecker

Based on the reduction of kilowatt sales, the Nome Joint Utilities System came to the conclusion it could no longer viably subsidize the water and sewer service to residents and brought to the Nome Common Council a request to sign off on rate hikes to the NJUS water and sewer

The Council agreed and approved the rate hike in the second reading of the ordinance. It spelled out the change to the rate schedule and made it official.

The rate hike poses a 12.5 percent increase in rates.

NJUS Manager John Handeland pointed out that the rate has not been increased since 1996.

"We could subsidize the water and sewer service by power sales, but now we don't have enough energy sales to subsidize it. It's not a self sustaining service," Handeland said.

Prior to the rate increase, a singlefamily household paid $36 for water. Now the bill will show a $40.50 water charge. The sewer charge will rise from $43 to $48.60, bringing the water and sewer charges up to $89.10 per single-family household. Seniors will still see a 40 percent discount. Water users on a metered service, such as the hospital, bars, restaurants, churches and hotels, will see a flat rate charge depending on their meter size.

"The board was quite hesitant to move this proposal forward, but there is no way around it," said Han-

People currently not connected to water service who enjoyed hauling their water for free at the 6th Avenue watering station next to the Rec Center, will now have to pay a flat fee of $40.50 per month. After the council meeting, Handeland explained that the facility at 6th Avenue will be closed temporarily to equip the facility with a metered outlet and a credit card type swipe that will allow registered water haulers to get their water. In the meantime, water haulers will have to get their water from the NJUS power plant.

There, NJUS employees will take the names of hauling residents and the names and driver's license numbers of transient water haulers to keep track of billing.

The Council unanimously passed the rate hike.

Sitting in for Mayor Denise Michels who was not present, Councilman Stan Andersen presided over the meeting with all council members present and Councilman Tom Sparks attending telephonically.

The Council also approved the # Spring whale caught north of Savoonga

By Diana Haecker

Savoonga whaler Floyd Kingeekuk made history last week when he and his crew landed a spring whale on the north side of St. Lawrence Island.

This - to nobody's knowledge has not been done before, since in spring the ice pack is usually thick on the north side. But the lack of ice due to a warming climate proved beneficial to the St. Lawrence Island whalers in this instance.

According to Alaska Eskimo Whaling Commissioner George Noongwook, Floyd Kingeekuk on May 4 caught the 48-ft. long female whale approximately 15 miles northeast of Savoonga. "It's a beautiful whale," Noongwook said.

Since there is still a mile of shoreast ice in front of Savoonga, hunters snowmachined their boats to the ice edge, launched the vessels and went looking for walruses.

Along the way, Noongwook said, they spotted the female whale and launched a successful strike. As there were only a few boats out and available to help, it took some time to bring in the whale as they had to motor against 20 knot northwest winds and against the current, towing a heavy whale.

Noongwook said Kingeekuk's whale was the third whale harvested this spring for Savoonga.

The first spring whale was harvested by whaling captain Charles Pelewook Jr. on April 6, the second was landed by the whaling captain Charles Edwards on April 27. These two whales were harvested off Southwest Cape.

According to Noongwook, John Waghiyi called the whale harvested by Kingeekuk a "centennial whale" not only because it was harvested off the north shore, but also because 2014 marks Savoonga's 100th year

To that end, the Coast Guard has prepared a draft Environmental Assessment on Coast Guard activities in the north, which was presented at a public meeting on Monday afternoon in the conference room of the UAF Northwest Campus in Nome. The Coast Guard, Amy Burt said, sees a need for increased presence to perform its missions of ensuring maritime safety, stewardship and security in an area that used to be a blank spot on the map because of its inaccessibility. As climate change decreases summer sea ice that used to lock up resources and prohibited ship transfers, the Arctic in recent years has became a buzzword in the shipping and resource industry. Dear Editor,

This is the saddest news to hear of a loss of a family member of the whole Norton Sound Region.

My family and I wish to extend our heartfelt sympathy and loss during this period of bereavement to Jackie Henry's Family.

This truly is an area impact to know one of the finest bush pilot has gone home. Words cannot say how caring, passionate, thoughtful, unselfish and loving Jackie Henry was. She was like a family member flying our family members on medivac's to Nome and Anchorage.

She always was a big shoulder to cry on, have a good laugh with or just to fly with her in the region was always a pleasant flight.

She will be missed but never forgotten. We were blessed to have her as a pilot and a friend and to have numerous flights with her. God bless and peace to her memory.

Thank you, Kathy Johnson Unalakleet, AK 99684

The Sky Isn't Falling

Chicken Little warned, "The sky is falling, the sky is falling!" But, the sky is not falling, it is winding up to sucker punch us into a reality alert. Global warming is real and we had better pay attention to science and take immediate action. A report written by over 300 scientists and four years in the writing was issued last week. It brought presidential concern and a focus on how global warming will impact our nation. The predictions are not pretty and the events are not in the future, they Informed residents of this nation need not be hit on the head with science. They can just stand outside and open their eyes, or sit in front of a TV and observe. Major hurricanes, killer tornadoes, wild fires, mudslides, and extreme temperature are impacting our nation. The New England states have frigid cold, the North Atlantic states are hotter and more humid than they have been in recorded weather history, the southern swamps are drying up, the California gardens are bone dry with reservoirs at critical low levels. Wildfires consume our verdant forests and the prairies fill with dust. We have no feed for our cattle. Our Pacific Ocean is getting warmer and our Arctic ice pack is melting. Our shorelines are eroding, our air is full of pollution and our water is getting dirtier. We also have politicians who are whistling in the dark and would like us to believe that things are rosy and we all will be just fine as we stroll down Primrose Lane. We should not worry our pretty little heads because our Congress will fix things by elimination the EPA and sending the Carbon Tax to the lower levels of Hell.

We can't leave the future of our patch of this earth in the hands of senators and representatives who flunked junior high science. We can't wait for Congress to get out of their rickety rocking chairs. Our weather, water, air, farms, fish and wildlife are in jeopardy now. We have to use our scientific knowledge to salvage what we can. We must get the ball rolling on the local grassroots level and encourage our nation and the rest of the world to join the cause to save our planet.

Sound Off

Action on Climate Change Crucial By Lauren Kolojejchick-Kotch (pronounced Co-lo-jay-chick-cotch), laurenk@cfra.org,

Center for Rural Affairs

Climate Change is happening; human activity is the primary cause and, without action, consequences will be dire. That's the overarching message of the National Climate Assessment, released on May 7th. The message is far from new, but cause for concern is growing quickly. Evidence of climate change now appears in every region and impacts are visible in every state in the U.S.

The Assessment reiterates messages of past climate reports and expands them with new data. The report answers frequently asked questions and discusses impacts to geographic regions and economic sectors. Entire chapters are devoted to rural communities and indigenous peoples, as well as sectors that are critical to the vitality of small towns; agriculture, water, energy, human health, forests, land use and land cover change.

The most devastating predicted impacts of climate change for rural communities will be intensity, frequency and duration of extreme weather events, intensified droughts and floods, soil erosion and temperature changes that decrease crop and livestock productivity. Drought, pests and wildfires threaten forests, too. It's clear, climate change is compromising rural livelihoods and the vitality of rural communities.

Understanding impacts of climate change is important, but building awareness of appropriate responses is even more critical. The Assessment stresses consequences, but also that adaptation is possible if action is taken soon to reduce carbon emissions. Building awareness and slashing carbon emissions is crucial to future vitality, and that is a job everyone can take part in.

U.S. Department of Commerce chips in $1 Million for Port of Nome

U.S. Secretary of Commerce Penny Pritzker announced last week that the Department's Economic Development Administration is awarding $1 million for improvements to the Port of Nome. "The Obama Administration is committed to supporting our nation's ports, which play a crucial role in increasing U.S. exports and strengthening our economy," said Secretary Pritzker. "The EDA grant will help reinvigorate the Port of Nome and bring more business to the region."

EDA's investment in the city of Nome will support the construction of a dock and roll-on/roll-off ramp at the Port, which will enable the port to deliver service to a greater number of incoming ships. According to grantee estimates, this project will create 10 jobs and attract roughly $700,000 in private investment to the

The State Legislature included $3 million in the capital budget for the construction of Nome's middle dock.

Unusual Mortality Event closes for Pacific walruses

The Working Group on Marine Mammal Unusual Mortality Events made the determination late last week that Pacific walruses will be removed from the list of animals currently being affected by a disease that has impacted several seal species across the North Slope and Bering Strait regions of Alaska since 2011. The Northern Pinniped Unusual Mortality Event will remain open for ice seals (ringed seals, ribbon seals, bearded seals and spotted seals)—based on continued reports of ice seals with disease symptoms from the Bering Strait region of Alaska. Monitoring for signs of the still unknown disease in Pacific walruses will continue through existing biological monitoring programs in Alaska.

Beginning in July 2011, elevated numbers of sick or dead ice seals were reported across the North Slope and Bering Strait regions of Alaska. Most affected seals had skin lesions and patchy hair loss. Some also exhibited lethargy and labored breathing. In September, 2011, several walrus carcasses with unusual skin lesions were also reported at a walrus haulout site on the Chukchi Sea coast of Alaska near the community of Point Lay.

By December 2011, an UME for northern pinniped species was declared. An investigative team of national and international specialists from numerous agencies, laboratories, and institutions; which included tribal leaders, hunters, scientists, veterinarians, wildlife biologists, and disease diagnosticians, was formed to investigate the underlying causes of the disease syndrome affecting northern pinniped species. Despite extensive analytical investigations on tissue samples from affected animals, no known or new infectious viral or bacterial agents, harmful algae toxins, or industrial contaminants have been identified that can explain the observed skin lesions and other symptoms in ice seals or walruses

Although the cause of the skin lesions observed at the walrus haulout in 2011 remains unknown, surveillance efforts in 2012 and 2013 found very few new walrus cases, suggesting that the conditions contributing to elevated levels of skin lesions in walruses are no longer present. he public is encouraged to report sightings of dead or stranded marine mammals in Alaska to the Alaska Marine Mammal Stranding Hotline at 1-877-925-7773; or to local wildlife authorities at the following numbers: Alaska Sea Grant Marine Advisory Program: 1-855-443-2397 or 907-434-1149; Eskimo Walrus Commission:1-877-277-4392; Kawerak, Inc. 907-443-4265.

Report predicts effects of climate change on Native communities

John Walsh, chief scientist at the UAF International Arctic Research Center, served as a lead author on the climate science chapter. Climate change will strongly affect Alaska Native communities in particular, the Alaska chapter said. Oceans around Alaska will see several changes, according to the Alaska chapter. Summer sea ice is receding and is projected to disappear by mid-cen-

In addition, more shrinkage of glaciers in Alaska and British Columbia will contribute to sea level rise. Increases in ocean temperatures and changes in ocean chemistry will affect marine fisheries, the researchers concluded.

Thawing permafrost in Alaska will cause drier landscapes and more wildfire. The thawing also will release heat-trapping gases. The climate assessment also discusses whether humans have caused the changes. "That is a tricky challenge," Walsh said, because there has been no real warming of the global temperature in the past 15 years.

"If greenhouse gas is supposed to be warming the planet, why has the temperature leveled off for the last 15 years?"

The climate science chapter on which Walsh worked said with "high confidence" that the United States is warming and, while the eastern and northern regions have been wetter. the southwestern region has been

NJUS operations and maintenance budget of $13.2 million, consisting estimated revenue $13,605,128, leaving a net operating margin of $411,055.

In other business, the Council voted on resolutions to accept contract services. One resolution approved a contract with Altman, Rogers and Co. for audit services. Three other resolutions approved contract services for construction of the Richard Foster building: Ridge Contracting Inc. was awarded a $225,000 contract for steel piles; Impac Company Inc received the contract for $440,740 for structural insulated panels and Andy Milner Co. was awarded a $209,429 contract for steel joist framing and deck-

Brookly Iron Works won the bid for structural steel and was awarded $637,400 to do the job.

The council voted unanimously to award the contracts.

In the future, council meetings won't have to deal with requests for fee waivers any longer. Councilman Matt Culley had introduced a resolution for a City of Nome facility fee waiver policy.

This agenda item was discussed at length and – four amendments later - a resolution was passed that now puts it on the City's administration to deal with the rental and waiver requests of city-owned facilities.

One amendment permanently exempts the LOIBC, Nome Volunteer Fire Dept., the Iditarod Trail Committee, the annual Nome Public Schools basketball game invitational and Kawerak Inc. from paying fees for the rental of the Rec Center for the LOIBC tournament, the Iditarod Finisher's banquet, the Firemen's Carnival and the Kawerak Regional conference from paying rental fees because these events were historically supported via fee waiver by the Culley, trying to recoup every penny that the City spends on facility upkeep, janitorial work and supplies such as toilet paper, offered an amendment that would ask those to also chip in a 5 percent payment, but the amendment died on the table.

Kimberly Gooden, organizer of the annual Lonnie O'Conner Iditarod Basketball tournament, offered testimony and reminded the Council of the contributions the tournaments to make to the economy of Nome. and the contributions LOIBC made to improve the Rec Center, such as the purchase of bleachers and of scoreboards at the Rec Center and the Nome Elementary School. "Thanks for your long-term support," Gooden said. "It's not something that we can pull off by Culley maintained that the City is loosing money on waiving rental We loose money on these things, but it has to stop. We gotta start tying up strings," he said.

In turn, he suggested, that organizations that want fee waivers approach the Council at budget time to ask for sponsorship money. Randy Pomeranz asked, "What's difference between a fee waiver and giving money as contribution?"

Culley argued that the Council has then a better idea of what can be built into the budget and does not have to be bogged down with fee waiver requests during every Council meeting.

The motion for the resolution in its amended form carried unanimously.

In absence of the mayor, presiding councilmember Stan Andersen appointed Nelson "Jake" Kenick to the museum commission since Josie Stiles has handed in her resignation from the board.

The Council will meet again on Thursday at noon in a work session to discuss the Nome Public Schools budget and the City of Nome budget.

WALK OF LIFE— A crowd of smiling people, balloons, a rainbow of colorful flowers - courtesy of Seaside residents - and some great walking music: that was the scene on Front Street, Saturday May 10, as Nome held its sixth Annual Walk For Life. The walkers in Nome were not alone. They were a part of a bigger group, as walks were held across the region and throughout the state. Suicide, domestic violence, sexual abuse and addiction affect all residents. The Walk for Life means to send a message of celebration and hope. Folks are encouraged to reach out, seek help and offer support to those in need, encourages Kawerak Wellness director Bridie Trainor.

no more instances of the candyman have occurred.

GIVING INPUT— A small group of representatives from Nome Eskimo Community, Bering Straits Native Corporation, Kawerak and the Marine Advisory Program provided input to the Coast Guard's Environmental Assessment of its actions in the Arctic, including the Bering Strait and Norton Sound region. The meeting took place on Monday, May 12 at the NW Campus conference room.

Coast Guard

the Obama administration responded with a flurry of Arctic plans and more Arctic strategies are being drafted.

The Coast Guard's Environmental Assessment, a more than 100-page document accompanied by another 195-page biological assessment, found that its proposed actions and presence in the Arctic and the Bering Strait region will have no significant impacts on the marine environment, marine mammals, cultural or socioeconomics.

Jamie Robinson said that the finding is in part based on a "resource neutral" approach, meaning that the Coast Guard does not plan to construct land-based infrastructure and will keep their operations limited to ships and airplanes. This includes that there are no current fleshed-out plans to use or not to use the Coast Guard's property at Port Clarence.

Most of the EA concentrated on issues relevant to the North Slope and Barrow. The Nome audience pointed this out repeatedly.

The point was made when the Coast Guard presented a map that showed every village on the North Slope, but did not show any coastal community except for Nome, Port Clarence and Kotzebue.

A best management practices fact sheet was circulated. In addition to adhering to Occupational Safety and Health Administration safety regulation, it lists the commitment to train crew members in marine mammal identification in order to avoid encounters and to stay away from known sanctuaries and feeding grounds; subsistence areas and to avoid flight paths over land when subsistence hunting is going on or large groups of animals gather.

When the increase in shipping traffic or resource development is discussed, most Bering Strait residents fear an oil spill and the region's inability to deal with it due to lack of training and oil spill response gear.

The Coast Guard is partnering with the State of Alaska to prepare an Alaska Spill Contingency Plan.

As agencies and officials with very little knowledge of the Bering Strait region come through Nome, one message by local stakeholders is getting more and more pronounced: the request for meaningful input and the offer to share traditional knowledge of land, weather, ice and animal movements.

Vera Metcalf with the Eskimo Walrus Commission asked about the Coast Guard's efforts to include input from other Bering Strait and Norton Sound communities. Jamie Robinson answered that an outreach mechanism is in place through the "Kids Don't Float" program, a mass rescue operation exercise and an ice rescue program based on what the Coast Guard knows from ice rescue operations on the Great Lakes in the U.S. Midwest.

This did not answer the question, but the lack of other city councils or tribal governments attending via teleconference brought home the point that outreach could be optimized.

In her comments, Kawerak's Vice President of Natural Resources Rose Fosdick stressed the wish of the region's residents for inclusion. "I hope you will gather local knowledge on areas to be avoided. We all know that the villagers will be the first responders in the event of a spill or an accident. Any training or outreach would be welcomed by our communities," said Fosdick. She also stressed cultural sensitivity and suggested the Coast Guard establish a tribal and Alaska Native liaison to maintain continued relations.

Comments by MAP agent Gay Sheffield, Roy Ashenfelter and Vera

Metcalf pointed out the large gaps in detailed knowledge of animal species and movements in the Bering Strait region, whereas detailed discussion was made in the EA for the North Slope and Northwest Arctic Borough.

Sitnasuak Native Corporation Land Manager Austin Ahmasuk commented that the EA lists a no significant impact finding across the board, but the authors of the EA failed to discuss why. "One thing that strikes me is that not many references are listed that are widely accepted by the Alaska Native community," Ahmasuk said. "There is no discussion on how you reach the FONSI determination."

Bering Straits Native Corporation Land Manager Larry Pederson requested that the Coast Guard enforce applicable regulations with the large mining fleet Nome.

The offshore miners were not addressed in the EA at all, despite the Coast Guard's mission of enforcing ship and boat safety regulations, Pederson remarked. "There are hundreds of vessels varying from small suction dredges to excavators on tracks to barges with excavators, these vessels are leaking, sinking and rolling over in our waters," Pederson said. "Is the Coast Guard monitoring them?"

The answer was: not really, because those vessels are not fitting any existing regulations.

Robinson said that the Coast Guard has become more involved in looking at regulation language and how it can be applied to the contraptions that are in Nome's waters in the summer.

"It's a bit of an area where regulations don't overlay as neatly as for commercial fishing vessels," Dombkowski said.

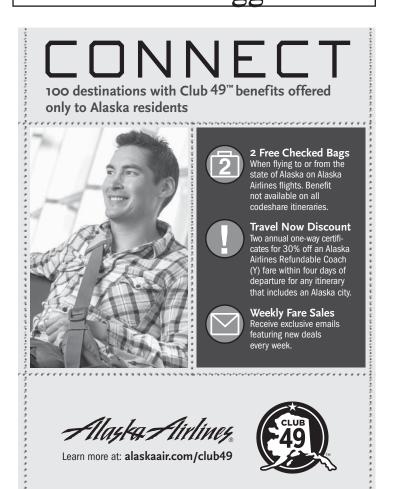

Roy Ashenfelter asked that the Coast Guard next year begin their consultation process earlier to give people a better chance to look at the EA before the deadline for comments runs out.

Sons Subdivision not approved

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Planning Commission voted approval for the GCI cell tower to continue standing on West Third Avenue under a conditional use permit. The 60-ft. tower has been poking the sky at that location for some years with an antenna for cell service. The installation also includes an 8 ft. by 8 ft. building for storing batteries and all the equipment that makes cell phones work, according to Earl Merchant, GCI employee. All property owners of record within 300 feet of the tower received notice of the hearing May 6, but none showed to state an opinion one way or another.

Merchant attended to answer questions from the commission. The pole was set deep enough not to need guy wires, he said, and is engineered to withstand high winds.

The commission returned to Nikolai Ivanoff an application for their approval of a major subdivision plat for more work. Sons Subdivision comprises five lots along Dexter Bypass Road. The application has come before the commission several times, but has not succeeded in gaining approval.

This time, after discussing findings by John Blees, acting city engineer who noted requirements in City law, the commission asked for another list of work orders to make the preliminary plan ready to pass muster:

•Make legible additions of sewer and water and utility easements and any improvements to the proposal.

•Address improvements to the lots.

•Add more information on the percolation tests shown on the plat. Percolation tests are required for onsite sewage disposal systems. A "perc" test shows the absorption rate of soil for a septic drain field. The subdivision plans do not currently seek water and sewer hookups.

•Rework a plan for snow removal storage to a more appropriate lot considering contours of the land.

Following the meeting, the commission spent another hour discussing the 2014 local hazard mitigation update. The plan has to show changes in development that have occurred in hazard prone areas and increased or decreased vulnerability in the City of Nome census area. The commission went over maps of the Front Street, harbor and airport areas to identify new development since Feb. 15, 2008 when the last update was filed.

The community is midway into a public commentary period for the City of Nome zoning code and enforcement survey. The survey asks for the public, the residents to be affected, to express their priorities and to give suggestions on the rules they find important for backup. One can get paper copies of the questionnaire at Nome City Hall or answer the survey online at wwwdotsurveymonkeydotcom/s/NPC2014. The comment period will close June 13. So far, fewer than 50 comments have been received, Eileen Bechtol, city planner said.

Gun dealer on trial

An Alaska judge has approved a trial in a lawsuit brought by the family of Simone Kim, of Juneau, against the gun dealer who supplied his killer with a gun.

This suit is the first case in Alaska that seeks to hold a gun dealer liable for an alleged negligent transfer of a firearm resulting in injury or death.

Judge Philip M. Pallenberg of the Superior Court of the State of Alaska at Juneau denied defendant Ray Coxe's summary judgment motion late Friday, May 2. Judge Pallenberg had earlier dismissed the case, but in February 2013, the Supreme Court of Alaska unanimously reversed that decision (Kim v. Coxe).

"Simone Kim was a caring and creative young man, simply doing his job, when his life was taken from him by a crazed fugitive who had no business getting his hands on a gun," said Jonathan Lowy, director of the Legal Action Project at the Brady Center to Prevent Gun Violence and co-counsel for the Kim family. "The court correctly decided the Kim family is entitled to its day in court, to prove to a jury that a gun dealer irresponsibly supplied a weapon to Simone's killer, and is partly responsible for Simone's death."

The Brady Center to Prevent Gun Violence's Legal Action Project and the Choate Law Firm in Juneau filed suit on behalf of Kim's family on July 31, 2008. The complaint alleges that gun dealer Ray Coxe allowed meth-addicted fugitive Jason Coday to leave his store with the rifle Coday used to shoot and kill Kim, a 26-year-old stranger that was murdered while painting outside a supermarket. The suit alleges that Coxe engaged in an illegal sale of the gun to Coday without a Brady background check.

"Everyone understands that dealers should act responsibly to prevent criminals and other dangerous people from obtaining firearms. After almost six years of fighting for justice, the Kims finally have their chance to present their case before a jury to decide whether it was reasonable for this gun dealer to enable Simone's killer to obtain a deadly weapon," added Lowy.

Attorney Mark Choate of the Choate Law Firm is co-counsel for the Kim family along with Jonathan Lowy.

of existence as a town.

Whale hunts are done twice a year: during the spring and fall migration of bowhead whales through the Bering Strait. Savoonga has a quota of eight whale strikes a year.

While the spring whale caught on the north shore is big news, the community has been hunting a portion of their fall whales also north of the island. 1990 marked the first time that a bowhead whale was taken on the north during the fall hunt. "About 40 percent of our fall hunt can be done on the north in early winter," said Noongwook.

Noongwook explained that in springtime, it is the custom for whaling captains and their crews to load up their snowmachines with gear and tow boats behind them for about 40 miles across the island to Southwest Cape, where traditionally whaling camps were set up.

This spring, for the first time a whaler was able to spare the trip, save on the cost of gas to power the machines and save on time to haul everything to SW Cape.

Approximately 90 percent of Savoonga residents rely on marine mammal foods, and the bigger the animal harvested, the longer food stores hold. "We hunters are attuned to looking for opportunities," Noongwook explained. In a region where weather and ice conditions are changing quickly and are severe most of the time, hunters need to be opportunistic and embark on hunting expeditions when conditions are right and the animals are there. "We noticed that there are still bowhead whales around in great numbers," said Noongwook. "We are looking, observing and making the best use of our resources to provide the food our community needs."

With having to spend less money on gas and supplies to travel to camp in SW Cape, and the time saved on the travel, setting up camp and returning, the swift success of landing the whale allowed the hunters to go out quicker in search for more food. "Climate change isn't all that bad," said Noongwook.

Last year, St. Lawrence Island experienced a dismal walrus hunt due to adverse weather and ice conditions. The state issued an economic disaster declaration, but that offered no relief to the reality of empty freezers. Kawerak Inc., Alaska Community Action on Toxics and other organizations in Nome and Anchorage organized a food drive to alleviate the food shortage.

The City of Nome applauds results of Project Synergy Phase II Synthetic Drug Takedown

City of Nome Mayor Denise Michels and the Nome Police Department Chief John Papasodora released the following statement:

Thursday May 8, the DEA issued a press release announcing "the culmination of Project Synergy Phase II, an ongoing effort targeting every level of the dangerous global synthetic designer drug market. Since January and leading up to early Thursday morning, nationwide enforcement operations have taken place targeting these drug trafficking organizations that have operated in communities across the country." This is collaboration with other federal, state and local partners.

"The Special Operations Division-coordinated Project Synergy initiative is aimed at bringing together federal, state, local, and international law enforcement resources to target the dangerous global synthetic designer drug industry through coordinated, united strategies."

The City of Nome applauds the results of Project Synergy Phase II and has taken action at the local level to keep designer drugs off the market in Nome.

The City of Nome passed an ordinance banning the sale and distribution of Synthetic or Imitation Substances including Synthetic Cannabinoids, Synthetic Cathinones and Synthetic Stimulants on February 10, 2014. The City of Nome was the second city in the State of Alaska to pass this ordinance following action by the Municipality of Anchorage. The ordinance adopted by the City of Nome is modeled after the Anchorage ordinance. This measure became necessary when the Nome Police Department verified that the substances were being sold commercially within the City of Nome and Police Chief John Papasodora approached the City Council with a draft ordinance to prohibit the sale or possession of these substances.

In recommending immediate action on this issue, Chief Papasodora stated, 'illicit synthetic drugs are an immediate and ever-present threat to the public safety and to the health of our community; young people in particular, and are causing psychological and physical affects to users. The long-term effects of the use of these substances is unknown, however we have encountered several persons under the influence of synthetic drugs that are experiencing paranoia and psychosis.' The proposed ordinance became necessary to protect the community and promote public health and safety. Previous attempts by the Alaska Legislature to criminalize these substances failed as the law could only criminalize chemical compositions, which are easily altered by those producing these substances.

In support of the ordinance, Mayor Denise Michels said that Synthetic Cannabinoids are not marijuana; these are drugs made in a lab. They are usually made by spraying a chemical onto something that can be smoked or swallowed. Citing personal knowledge of drug issues in Nome, the Mayor stated that the young people using synthetic substances have no idea of the harmful effects.

In further action, the City Council approved a budget amendment at the recommendation of the Nome Police Department to develop and implement a police canine program focusing on the interdiction and prevention of drugs.

Officer Justin Timm and his family volunteered to participate. Officer Timm and the newest member of the Nome Police Department, ICON, returned from police canine drug training in Alabama at the Kasseburg training facility.

Officer Timm and ICON will be deployed as a further step to identify and interdict drugs coming into Nome as well as assisting other agencies with interdiction for northwest Alaska communities.

TRUCK RESCUE— The sea ice in front of Nome broke off and left two ice miners and their trucks on the wrong side of the lead. On Monday, April 28, the two crew members of the "Lazy Gator" mining outfit went on a mission to float their trucks back to shore on a sheet of sea ice.

Red Devil, Circle have minor flooding during breakup

The River Watch program has concluded operations for 2014, Dept. of Homeland Security and Emergency Services announced this week.

The River Watch program provides early warning to communities prone to spring breakup flooding.

Ice conditions and low water levels have made further ice jam flooding unlikely this spring.

The National Weather Service Alaska –Pacific River Forecast Center forecasted a below average flood potential for the 2014 breakup. The communities of Red Devil on the Kuskokwim River and Circle on the Yukon River experienced minor flooding. River Watch was on location during each minor flood event to provide river updates to the community, to help the communities prepare and to coordinate immediate emergency management assistance if flooding occurred.

The lack of snow, a mild winter and warm spring temperatures allowed ice to melt and degrade in place. Unlike normal breakup seasons when ice typically begins moving on the upper stretches of the rivers and then works its way down to the ocean, this spring saw multiple spots along the rivers breakup and move simultaneously.

"While the flood forecast called for a below average risk of flooding this year, the anxiety of residents along the river was very high after last spring's historic flooding," said Claude Denver, DHS&EM's Response Manager. "Along both river systems we saw communities actively planning and preparing for flooding, seeking information from the River Watch teams, and acting quickly when minor flooding occurred."

As the threat of breakup flooding passes, DHS&EM is preparing to rebuild communities ravaged by last year's breakup flooding. National volunteer organizations United Methodist Volunteers in Mission and Samaritan's Purse are scheduled to mobilize hundreds of volunteers to help with the recovery effort. State and FEMA emergency managers have been working all winter to ensure building sights and materials will be ready when volunteers arrive.

The recovery mission is scheduled to be completed by September.

Each spring, the River Watch program, a partnership between the Division of Homeland Security and Emergency Management and the National Weather Service, conducts aerial observations of rivers prone to ice jam flooding. The River Watch Teams provide flood warnings and alerts and assist communities re-

Nome Beltz High School students release coho fry

By Laureli Kineen NSEDC

Communications Director

Two Nome Beltz High School students released 19 coho fry into Anvil Creek last week as part of a course in their high school fisheries biology class. Working in close partnership with high school biology teacher Brian Marvin and the students, the Norton Sound Fisheries and Development (NSFR&D) team moved eggs ready for hatching to a live tank at a Nome Beltz science lab in October. In the year-long course students learned about the salmon lifecycle and dissolved oxygen, alkalinity and copper water testing. They also learned about fish mortality rates, mark recaptures and net mending, Nome Beltz High School science teacher Brian Marvin says.

NSFR&D has, for a number of ears, worked with students at the Nome Beltz Jr. and Sr. High, the Anvil City Science Academy and the Nome Elementary School, along with other schools in the region. "Even though our emphasis is fisheries development," NSEDC Fisheries Biologist Kevin Keith says, "the educational component is very important. Ultimately we'd like to see these students grow up to be invested in fisheries. Whether it be as a subsistence or commercial fisherman, a manager, running a seafood plant, working on a tender or in fisheries research."

The fry released last Thursday were initially fertilized in September and raised in incubators as part of Norton Sound Economic Develop-Corporation's (NSEDC) salmon rehabilitation program and were released into Anvil Creek, a tributary in the Snake River, once depleted of coho. In the past few years the tributary has seen significant returns since egg planting first occurred in 2005.

High School science teacher Brian Marvin studied fisheries biology at the University of Wisconsin. He plans on teaching another fisheries biology course again next year.

Alaska DMV changes drivers licenses

In an effort to enhance the security of driver licenses and identification cards (ID), the Alaska Division of Motor Vehicles is moving to a Central Issuance process starting June 2014. The phased approach begins with issuance and renewal of Alaskan driver license or ID and does not require customers to immediately obtain a new license. At that time of renewal Alaskans will receive a temporary card that acts as an official form of identification until a secured license or ID is mailed, a practice similar to credit cards or voter ID cards.

"Moving to Central Issuance makes a fake ID significantly more difficult to create due to updated security features in the new design that better protect Alaskans from license forgery and identity theft," remarked Commissioner Curtis W. Thayer at the Department of Administration which houses AK DMV.

The temporary card is a sturdy paper replica of your ID valid for 60 days and will serve as your identification until the updated license or ID is processed and mailed to you in 2-

The Alaska DMV is working statewide with law enforcement, businesses and community leaders to spread the word on the updated process of using a temporary card until people receive the new license or ID in the mail.

"This will be a big step as you go into AK DMV and get a temporary license or ID before you receive the is a current best practice of 26 other

Legendary Speedy looks at 16 years of service at Nome Elementary School

By Diana Haecker

Teachers in life come in all shapes, forms and sizes. One of the most unusual ones can be found in Nome Elementary School's fourth grade pod. He lives there in a sturdy glass terrarium, mostly snoozing away until it's showtime.

The creature is Speedy, the snake. More specifically, he is a 16-year-old Jungle Carpet Python (Amelia spilota cheynei), about 7 ft. 6 in. long, which is average length for his species, as his owner, NES teacher Ian McRae, assures.

Speedy has touched the lives of countless students who have rotated through Mr. McRae's classroom over the years.

Speedy was hatched by a snake breeder in Montana. As a hatchling he was very fast, hence his name "Speedy".

The snake traveled to Nome by airplane, concealed in a female undergarment worn on the person of his first human owner, Nome Elementary School teacher Karen Chadwick. When Mrs. Chadwick retired and left Nome, she asked her colleague, "What am I going to do with this snake?" Believing in the communal nature of the snake's ownership, McRae answered, "He belongs to the students at the Elementary School, let's keep him here."

After $250 changed hands, McRae was the new owner of a pretty black snake with yellow markings. Since then McRae said, the investment has paid off multifold as Speedy has enhanced student engagement and learning.

If your child was in McRae's class, chances are that he or she shared the classroom with a 70 inch long python that gets regularly set loose to "enhance" learning. Parents, don't panic. Even though he looks like he could take a chunk out of a person, Speedy doesn't bite. He has only tiny teeth in the back of his jaw to keep his prey from backing out. His specialty is strangling or constricting, but only when he's really hungry and in the mood for food.

Visiting McRae's classroom, librarian Nancy Bahnke takes the snake with the knowledge and confidence of a regular snake handler and allows the reptile to drape himself around her neck like a fancy scarf. The snake casually slithers up her arm, around her neck, through her hair and pokes his head out, forming a ring around her neck. Bahnke firmly grips the snake and loosens its hold, commenting that he's just the right size to still get wrestled off one's neck when he gets too constrictive.

And he sure likes to hide. "I can think of two or three times that he went missing at the school," remembers McRae. "Rather than starting a widespread panic by announcing that a python is loose in the school, I always have the kids conduct a search first, which most kids are more than willing to do. He has been discovered in closets, in file cabinets, and bookshelves."

So far, only mice and rats have fallen victim to the snake and no child has ever been harmed by Speedy. McRae credits Mrs. Chadwick with his tempered behavior around humans. "Mrs. Chadwick did a particularly good job of handling Speedy in his early days, thus differentiating the smell of humans from the smell of food. It is somewhat rare to have a python docile enough to be handled by children," McRae said.

Speedy gets fed a medium sized rat once every two weeks. Although he prefers live prey that he can strike, strangle and ingest, he sometimes has to eat frozen rats, too.

Every aspect of his life is turned into a science lesson for the students. "We practice scientific observation when he eats by recording how long it takes him to strike the prey, and how many gulps to swallow, and then we analyze the data using our math skills, things like "mean" and "range," McRae said.

Using food is tricky because when Speedy smells the scent of food, he gets aggressive. "And that is when he is most dangerous," says McRae. Feeding has to be done inside his cage. "It takes a while after he feeds to transition him away from "hunting mode" so that he can be handled by people again," explains McRae. "He'll lie there coiled up for days waiting to strike, waiting for a rat to fall out of the sky. I literally have to pour cold water on him to snap him out of hunting mode."

"Mostly, we use Speedy to learn scientific method: hypothesis, procedure, data, analysis, conclusion," explains McRae. "We do an experiment to test if he can hear - no. Then we do one where we lie on the floor in a circle, half of us wearing coats and half not, and we see if Speedy exits the circle over a warm body or a cold body."

The snake molts four times a year, giving students the chance to go home with a piece of snake skin that can be used for all kinds of creative skin sewing. Apparently he feels particularly poorly when molting in winter dog would to one person in particular. But his owner is very fond of him, even so he calls him a "cold blooded killer" and so are the students. "For the overwhelming majority of kids, curiosity overcomes nervousness, and they are all drawn to Speedy as if toward a magnet," said McRae. "There is some special connection between kids and reptiles." Not only kids are drawn to the strange creature, but McRae also introduced two Elders from Little Diomede to Speedy. "They've never seen a reptile before," McRae said. "The look of wonderment on their faces was unforgettable.'

While eyesight is not his keenest faculty, the snake has a phenomenal sense of smell. McRae explained that the snake acts agitated around a new person whose smell he doesn't know yet. And he remembers those who have handled him before. A former student of McRae's walked into the classroom— 11-year-old Devin Kakaruk used to handle the snake a lot when in McRae's class. He was at first a bit rusty and shy around the snake. Speedy recognized his old friend and slithered all over the boy, almost disappearing inside a rip in Devin's snow pants. But as soon as the boy relaxed, the snake draped himself like a gun slung over Devin's back and just hung out. Two second-graders, Sarah and Jenevieve, joined the snake-watching party and quietly looked at the black and yellow beast as he hung almost motionless and took in their scent with forked tongue.

"Kids learn a lot just by being around Speedy," observed McRae. "They learn that an animal brain minus the mammalian brain equals a creature that thinks only by instinct and smell. They learn that hunting, killing, and eating is a dispassionate act for a reptile."

He added that they also see that a reptile is not well adapted for life in the Arctic.

At times that gives McRae a feeling of guilt. Is it ethical to keep a python in Nome, Alaska? "Only the incredible response and engagement that the snake produces in the students makes it OK," he said. "Plus, after all these years with Speedy, I've grown very fond of him. I love him."

And so do the kids.

James T. Hancock

James T. Hancock, 57, of Nome, died on April 19, at Norton Sound Hospital with his family by his side. He was born on November 4, 1956 in Kirkland, Washington, the son of Donald J. and Betty J. (Isakson)

Hancock

Jim, also known to friends as JT, grew up in Redmond, Washington, graduating from Redmond High School in 1975. Jim loved his country and after high school served in the Air Force from 1975 -1979 where he received weather service training. He also served many years thereafter in the Washington Air National Guard

Jim was employed by the National Weather Service in Nome for the past 19 years after working in weather observation for many years, including an 18-month post at the South Pole, Antarctica.

Jim was an auctioneer as well. He met his wife, Pamela Johnson-Hancock at an auction in April 1986. They were married on August 20, 1988 in Mayville, New York, and together had two daughters, Cara, 20, and Bethany, 14.

Jim's passion was auto racing, especially Sprint Cars. The love of racing was passed down from his father. The two brothers, Jim and Joe took up the sport and purchased their first sprint car in 1976. Joe drove and Jim was his pit crew. The two brothers raced together all over the western United States. In 1986 Jim moved to West Virginia and started a couple of businesses with his long time friend, Jim Buck. Although he was on the other side of the country he still kept fully abreast of his brother's racing. When Jim returned to Washington State in 1989, he picked up where he'd left off and was hands on again racing with his brother until he, Pam and baby Cara moved to Nome in 1995. Jim and Joe always had many great stories to tell about their racing days.

Jim co-DJ'd Musical Collisions with friends at KNOM radio station in Nome. He loved '80s music and trivia. He was always the guy you wanted on your team for trivial pursuit. And loving music as much as he did, taught himself to play the guitar. He'd play and sing Jimmy Buffett songs to his girls, even recording himself on cassette tapes whenever they would be apart so the girls could have him with them.

Jim loved the outdoors. He enjoyed hiking, biking, cross-country as well as downhill skiing. Three times he ran the Anvil Mountain Run which is a 17K run to the top of Anvil Mountain in Nome (elevation 1,134 ft) and back down again. The course must be completed within 5 hours with the return path being down the face of the mountain.

He had an amazing sense of humor and a quick wit, which he usually portrayed through writing.

In the mid to late 1800s here in our region whalers had severely impacted the local population of marine life, leaving the indigenous population in very hard times, a major food source became scarce, to make matters even more dire there is evidence of the decline of terrestrial mammals.

In 1892, Captain Healy of the U.S. Revenue Cutter Bear along with Dr. Sheldon Jackson delivered 171 Reindeer to Teller Reindeer Station at Port Clarence. This was brought on by concerns from the Captains of the U.S. Revenue Cutter Service, who believed that the wellbeing of natives living along the Bering Sea Coast may have been in jeopardy due to lack of food sources in the sea and on land.

Later in history reindeer products became a good source of income, but nature also took its course and the caribou, undomesticated its tame cousin, also wolves and other predators sharply declined the numbers of animals. Because a lack of tending the herds was a problem, the "cattle" were brought under new management. In 1968 the Bureau of Indian Affairs took over management.

Since then reindeer have become a part of some our lives, as for feeding people, in the early days, I believe that, yes, reindeer may have fed some people, today the business of reindeer is on he decline, and many people are still suffering from hunger in our region.

Yet our regional organization Kawerak, Inc. as of late (earlier this winter) took by force the herd that belonged to Teller, Alaska. Saying that Teller is not managing this herd properly.

Aspirin for heart disease: A primary prevention dilemma

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

The US Food and Drug Administration (FDA) recently recommended against the use of aspirin for prevention of a first heart attack. This recommendation seems to contradict the long-standing recommendation from the American Heart Association (AHA). The AHA has recommended a daily low-dose aspirin for high-risk groups.

So to whom will you listen? A little background may be helpful.

Aspirin, or its precursor salicin, has been used to treat and pain fever since the time of

Hippocrates nearly 2500 years ago; however, the heart-protecting effects of aspirin were not known until 1948 when an astute general practitioner named Lawrence Craven found that his patients did not suffer heart attacks when taking daily as-

Since then numerous studies demonstrate that a daily aspirin can lower the risk of myocardial infarction, the most common form of heart attack, by about 30 percent.

you read or hear. There may be some truth to these claims but it can

When a blood vessel is damaged, platelets begin to fill the defect by sticking to each other and forming a clot. This platelet plug prevents further blood loss until the body can lay down a mesh of fibrin and begin the process of tissue repair. Aspirin, also known as acetyl salicylic acid, blocks the ability of platelets to adhere to damaged blood vessel walls thereby preventing clot formation. The platelet hamperingside effects OCTOR of daily aspirin therapy can be life saving if a clot begins to form in an artery feeding the heart.

But a daily aspirin is not safe for everyone. Aspirin can be dangerous for patients with bleeding disorders or those at risk for hemorrhagic stroke. Furthermore, aspirin increases acid production in the cells of the stomach and causes a disruption in the protective lining of the stomach wall. This increases the risk of developing bleeding gastric ulcers by as much as 70 percent in people taking a daily aspirin.

So the use of aspirin daily presents a dilemma to doctors who want to help patients lower their risk of heart disease without increasing their risk of life-threatening bleeding. To solve this problem, physicians will perform a risk assessment to determine if a person's risk of heart disease warrants the risk of prescribing a daily aspirin.

A risk assessment focuses on several important factors known to increase the risk of developing coronary artery disease: smoking, high blood pressure, elevated cholesterol, diabetes, stress, sedentary lifestyle, excessive alcohol consumption, age, and family history of heart disease. Doctors use these factors to perform a calculation to determine each person's risk of having a cardiac event in the next ten years. Several versions of these calculators are also available to patients online.

According to the Âmerican Heart Association, daily aspirin should be reserved for those patients who have either already had a heart attack, or those whose calculated risk of having a cardiac event rises above 10 percent.

Daily aspirin for primary prevention of heart disease is no longer recommended for those whose risk falls below 10 percent. Instead, experts emphasize that daily physical activity, a healthy diet, and smoking cessation will minimize the progression exercise and basal energy expenditure. In the most simplistic of terms, if an individual wants to lose weight, they must eat less and exercise more. It is important to determine the overall amount of energy an individual must consume to maintain basic function and then determine the appropriate diet and exercise regimen that corresponds with it.

The key to any diet is finding the right balance of carbohydrates, proteins, and fats essential for every day life. These vary depending on a person's body type, energy expenditure, and a variety of other factors. As a result, the exact energy expenditure per activity varies from person to person.

Contrary to popular belief, not all carbohydrates are bad. Carbohydrates provide the main source of energy for the diet. As of 2010, the Dietary Guidelines for Americans recommended an individual to consume about 45-65 percent of their daily calories from carbohydrates. Carbohydrates also provide the fiber necessary for healthy digestion.

Carbohydrates are found in grains, fruits, vegetables, and dairy products. Some of the best sources of carbohydrates come from whole grains, frozen or fresh whole fruits and vegetables, and low fat dairy products.

Protein provides amino acids for the body to utilize in cell production. Our bodies are comprised of a variety of different amino acids. The protein we eat replaces the amino acids our body needs in order to continue functioning. For example, muscles break down with exercise and the amino acids from proteins are used as building blocks to restore muscle integrity. The Institute of Medicine recommends 10-35 percent of calories come from protein. Some of the best sources of protein come from lean meat, fish, eggs, beans, small portions of nuts/seeds, and low fat dairy products.

Fats provide a variety of functions in the human body and are essential in maintaining a healthy diet. Dietary fat provides a medium for Vitamins A, D, E, and K to be absorbed into the body, a concentrated form of energy, the building blocks for cell creation, and many more important functions. Different types of fat impact the body in different ways depending on their structure. The IOM recommends individuals consume between 20-35 percent of calories from fat. Healthy sources of fat include fatty fish, nuts/seeds, lean meat, low fat dairy products, and

When combined, carbohydrates, proteins, and fat provide us with the calories needed for a healthy diet. Unfortunately, most people underestimate the amount of calories they consume and overestimate the amount of calories they expend during exercise. This can be a challenge for many people attempting to lose weight. For this reason, the philosophy of moving more and eating less, doesn't always work for everyone.

I have yet to see anyone out lift their fork or out run their knife. When it comes to a healthy lifestyle, the best solution involves the right balance of calories from carbohydrates, proteins, and fats coupled with a healthy dose of exercise and the ability to maintain that lifestyle over an extended period of time.

AVEC Adds Bethel as a New

Alaska Village Electric Cooperative (AVEC) is pleased to announce that the Yukon-Kuskokwim hub community of Bethel (population 6,278) has become the 56th community served by the cooperative.

AVEC is a not-for-profit electric utility established under the Rural Electrification Act of 1935, part of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt's New Deal which was intended to put Americans to work building lines to serve rural communities that were not connected to electricity.

AVEC was established in 1967 to bring electricity to village Alaska, very few of which had electric service in the 1960s. Bethel, being a hub community, had enjoyed the modern benefits brought by electricity for decades before AVEC was established. Bethel Utilities Corporation (BUC) has owned and operated the

Saying it Sincerely

By Rev. Karen Sonray, Our Savior Lutheran Church Member of the Nome Ministerial Association

'I came that they might have life and have it abundantly." John 10:10 L'chaim! To Life!

This Hebrew phrase salutes life. Heard often at gatherings in the Jewish community, it is a toast to being among the living. It is recognition of the One who gives life.

Jesus' words in scripture cited above (John 10:10) resonate with "L'chaim!" To life! Jesus came into the world not to condemn but that we might have

What makes for an abundant life? Not a show of cars and possessions, homes and a rich bank account. Abundant life streams out of the soul; abundant life is grounded in a solid relationship with God. Having a good shepherd throughout our earthly journey will lead us to better spiritual nourishment and abundant life.

Jesus refers to himself as "the good shepherd." What does this mean? And why would people be compared to a flock of sheep? If you leave sheep alone to fend for themselves, they will consistently overgraze. They need a shepherd to push them along, keep them moving to better nourishment. Sound familiar? We humans like the comfort of the same patterns even when they are hurting us or at the very least even when we are not getting the enrichment and challenge we need.

So too, sheep are a vulnerable animal. After so many years of domestication, they do not know how to protect themselves. A shepherd will fend off the animals or thieves that surround them. A good shepherd uses the crook of the cane and pulls a wandering sheep back into the fold. There are things we cannot protect ourselves from in the human life—death, evil, sin itself but our Lord can and will.

To all who believe in Jesus as their Lord, we have someone who walks beside us as our companion and leader. Most leaders make decisions from afar, in safely protected offices far removed from their "citizens." Not Jesus. He is the good shepherd. The same storms that hit us, hit our Lord. When the snow falls, it falls on him. When the winds blow, he too must endure all that life and death bring. And, yes, He even lays himself down for our sake and gives his life to protect the sheep.

A good shepherd understands and knows their sheep by name. What role do the sheep have? Are they totally passive in their relationship with their shepherd? They know the voice of the shepherd. They respond to it. This is an important role and one we could spend more energy deepening for it is the source of abundant life!

Amid all the other information we are bombarded from the world, all the other people telling us which way to go, we need to cultivate a deep enough relationship with our Lord that we can discern that call above all others. Reading the scriptures, taking time in prayer, joining a fellowship or study group, attending worship, serving others —these are all ways to keep our inner ear attuned. And it is important to pass on this pattern to the generations that follow.

To life! Jesus came that we might have life and have it abundantly. Do not neglect listening to his voice, as he will lead you down right paths.

City investigates ways to raise revenue, save expenses

By Diana Haecker

Complicated fiscal business occupied the Nome Common Council last Thursday, May 15 during a noon work session as Councilmen worked through the task to balance the FY 2015 Nome budget, including the budget for Nome Public Schools.

For two hours Common Council members Jerald Brown, Randy Pomeranz, Louie Green Sr., Stan Andersen and Matt Culley, wrapped their minds around the issue of balancing the budget without having to dip into the city's savings account.

On hand to provide additional information were City Manager Josie Bahnke, City Finance Director Julie Liew, Nome lobbyist Wendy Chamberlain and Eddie Jeans of Legislative Consultants of AK who was present telephonically for in-depth information on state education finances.

In the end, it came down to either raising the mill rate, tighten the belt and finding additional revenue streams, or a combination of all of the above.

First, the Council looked at the property exemptions. By state law, property used exclusively for non-profit, religious, hospital or other charitable organizations are exempt from property tax. But the city grants even more exemptions and Councilman Culley wanted to comb through the list to see who or what organization is not state-required to be exempt from property taxes. How about taxing airplanes? Culley suggested.

To complicate matters, the state apparently included properties that are tax exempt in their calculation of the property tax base, which in turn determines how much money the City of Nome has to contribute to funding Nome Public Schools. Per state formula, the city is required through what's called "local effort" to contribute $1.873 million to NPS in FY15. In light of conflicting numbers, Councilman Andersen found this amount inflated and asked for clarification.

The fiscal state of the City's FY15 budget largely depends on how much NPS gets from the City. The combined state contribution to NPS is listed as $11,433,990.

Finances in place for middle dock at Port

By Diana Haecker

With a federal grant of $1 million, the City of Nome has sufficient funding in place to construct a third dock at the causeway to alleviate traffic congestion at the Port of

The federal grant came from the U.S. Dept. of Commerce, Economic Development Administration and was issued two weeks ago. The 28th State Legislature appropriated $3 million for the project in a line item of the capital budget. A state bond approved by voters last year granted $5 million and NSEDC contributed $500,000 to the project.

Port Projects Manager Joy Baker said the estimates to build the third dock were pegged at $9.4 million.

"The good news is that we have the funding together to build this project," told Baker the Port Commission in the regular meeting last week. "But after meeting with PND engineers in Anchorage, we came to the conclusion that a 2014 completion of the dock construction is unlikely," Baker said.

The City is currently working on putting the project out for bid.

Most contractors have their work lined up for this summer and to get the material ordered and on the barge to Nome would take at least until September.

Baker recommended that procuring materials now and barging them to Nome this season would be the best move. A contractor could then move equipment to Nome on the last barge in 2014 or the first barge in 2015 and could even begin armor rock and steel work prior to break up in 2015.

"We'd love to build this summer, but the nature of the short season precludes it," said Baker.

Port commissioners Jim West Jr., Doug Johnson, Iura Leahu and Rolland Trowbridge were present, with Commissioner Bryant Hammond participating telephonically in the May 15 regular meeting.

Nome to get to work on updating the party's platform, pass resolutions and endorse political candidates.

The party endorsed Forrest Dunbar as the Democratic candidate to challenge Congressman Don Young in the general election. Forrest Dunbar grew up in the rural Alaska communities of Eagle and Cordova. He worked as a commercial fisherman and wildland firefighter, and in-Senator for Frank Murkowski. Forrest graduated from American University in Washington, D.C., and went on to earn a Masters degree in Public Policy from Harvard and a law degree from Yale. Between college and grad school he served with the Peace Corps in Kazahkstan. He is currently a Judge Advocate in the Alaska Army National Guard.

Bob Williams also spoke at the convention. Williams is an educator from Palmer, who used to teach math at Nome-Beltz High School is running for Lt. Governor and faces Democrat Hollis French in the primary election in August.

French could not attend the Nome convention, but addressed the group in a video recording.

The party did not endorse any candidate running for Lt. Governor.

The Alaska Democratic Party's central committee endorsed Yakutatborn Byron Mallot in October and featured him as the keynote speaker at the Saturday night banquet at the Mini Convention Center.

Mallot delivered a solemn speech that centered on the concept of a healthy Alaska. He spoke of his beginnings growing up in Yakutat and the influence his parents had on him learning his native tongue but also preparing him to live in world where proficiency in English meant success. He spoke of the inequality in treatment Alaska Natives faced in

Dear Nome

It's been two long years since we have moved from Nome, but our hearts are still there with you. I continue to get the Nome Nugget to keep up with my friends. I was a very involved parent in Nome — volunteering at school, participating in community events, getting to know folks in town. It hasn't changed for me. I am still helping my kids' teachers here in Anchorage (Kincaid Elementary and Dimond High), still helping my kids with homework, still involved with PTSA and school issues.

I've been reading how the Nome School Board is considering changing curriculums to "better align itself with state common core standards." To note: the state has stopped using the words COMMON CORE for a reason. (They now use "Alaska State Standards," but let's be honest, it's Common Core, just with Alaska stamped on the front of it.) I have run into various NSB members these past couple of years and have voiced that these changes are coming and they need to do their research. Anchorage School District has adopted these standards and I don't have a lot of nice things to say about it.

Sure, those that glance over the Common Core think it's wonderful. Set syllabi, even lesson plans laid out; less work for the teacher after hours, right?

Words like "standards", "rigorous", and "the SAT is doing it" tend to scare our school boards into thinking that this is all good. The standards really aren't that different, it's the pathway of getting there that puts roadblocks into the understanding of the student. Being rigorous is flipped to introducing concepts and principles that young children can't physiologically understand or retain (so the same lessons are taught each year). Frankly, the SAT needs to be studied for, regardless of what curriculum you came from.

I have written to the NSB and admonished them to do some research. Ask some older teachers from Anchorage how it's working for them. Ask them how their experience is stifled due to the demands of the curriculum (sure you can

Dear Editor:

Support our youth to take advantage of what life has to offer

As I sat in the audience last week at Fort Lewis College in Durango, Colorado, watching my niece receive her degree, the old adage about 'being the bus driver or being the passenger' came to mind. Really, it was just a thought about being in control of your own life that made me realize the choices we make when we are between 18-22 shape our future so profoundly.

Do you want to drive the bus or just ride along while someone else goes where they want?

I know everyone has heard the "learn a trade or go to college" speeches before. Get ready, you are about to hear it again – only this time I want you to think about this: Do you want someone else driving the bus that determines where your mom, dad, brother, sister or grandparents go? Do you want to be heard?

As I watched my niece, Ashley Sockpick, receive her degree in cellular and molecular biology I was reminded of how fast life is changing for everyone. For example, three decades ago, computers weren't found in almost every home. Two decades ago, the Internet was something strange and new. Like it or not, our traditional way of life is changing here in Alaska. Our children are facing issues that our grandparents never dreamed of, and their children will face even more change. There is no reason we should let our children lag behind, or not become productive leaders in our society

With how fast our society is changing, it is even more important for us – as parents, family members and friends – to encourage and sup-

Sound Off

Oil Tax Myth By Rep. Les Gara

There are a number of little mentioned, troubling facts about Alaska's 2013 oil tax rollback — Senate Bill 21. For one, proponents inserted a special interest provision that continually reduces Alaska's revenue share for our oil, indefinitely into the future. The London and Houston executives, who've blitzed you with $8 million in ads and PR, have smartly kept this quiet.

This "disappearing revenue" provision continually lowers the tax rate on oil companies from SB 21's reduced 27 percent effective rate on profits today, to roughly half that in future years. Oil companies will get the gift of among the lowest tax rates in the world, at your expense.

I want you to be informed when you vote on repealing this law in August. SB 21 is a pathway to underfunded schools, lost needed energy solutions, and continued $1 billion-plus deficits.

Thanks to respected leaders across the political spectrum — including former First Lady Bella Hammond, Constitutional Delegate Vic Fischer, Democratic Gubernatorial candidate Byron Mallott and Independent candidate Bill Walker, Democratic and Republican legislators, former mayors Jim Whittaker (R-Fairbanks) and Jack Roderick (D-Anchorage) and others — for speaking up.

Young wants to streamline development on Spencer

Congressman Don Young this week introduced legislation to facilitate infrastructure development and potential uses of Point Spencer at Teller by establishing a public and private partnership with the federal government, the United States Coast Guard, the State of Alaska, the Bering Straits Native Corporation and private industry. The bill calls for the conveyance of more than 2,500 acres of existing federal land to interested stakeholders.

"I am proud to be joined by my friend Congressman Duncan Hunter, the Chairman of the Coast Guard and Maritime Transportation Subcommittee, in introducing legislation to provide the means necessary for future use and development of Point Spencer by federal, state, and private sector stakeholders," said Congressman Don Young. "We are desperately in need of development in the region, particularly as activity in the Arctic continues to increase, and this bill establishes a path forward for a variety of necessary tasks and missions, including search and rescue operations, shipping safety, economic development, oil spill prevention and response, port development and refuge, arctic research, and maritime law enforcement."

Under Congressman Young's bill, H.R. 4668, the Coast Guard would retain its footprint at Point Spencer, approximately 140 acres, in order to support possible future uses of the strategic location. That area includes a major footprint on the water, in addition to land on which the Coast Guard boarded up operations in 2010. The bill also provides the Coast Guard with the rights to use the current and any future airstrips for federal purposes at no cost and permits the leasing of additional lands from BSNC should the Coast Guard need them.

The State of Alaska would receive approximately 180 acres of federal lands, including the existing airstrip, a shoreline footprint on the water, and a right-of-way for future development of a road from the airstrip to the mainland across Coast Guard and BSNC land. Additionally, the tidelands and submerged lands around Point Spencer would be recognized as having continued ownership by the State of Alaska.

The bill provides BSNC with the remainder of lands, approximately 2.381 acres, satisfying a portion of BSNC's land entitlement under the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, and thereby allowing for future uses of Point Spencer. The bill also provides language to help ensure protections for archaeological and ancestral items of antiquity through the Archaeological Resources Protection Act of 1979, the National Historic Preservation Act, and the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act. However, it does not address protection of subsistence activities.

GAO report finds U.S. lacks focus in Arctic matters

The Governmental Accountability Office released a report this week that recommended the Dept. of State become clear and focused in the direction the U.S. is aiming to go when it comes to the upcoming 2015 Chairmanship of the Arctic Council. "Without a clear direction or specific resources for the collaborative effort, the agencies face challenges prioritizing the work, delivering unified messages to other Arctic States, and consistently participating in the Council," the report concludes.

Six key federal agencies hold leadership roles in the Arctic Council and other agencies participate through the Council's working groups and task forces. The U.S. Department of State leads this participation and collaborates with the five other key agencies that lead the delegations to Arctic Council working groups: the Environmental Protection Agency, National Nuclear Security Agency, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and U.S. Global Change Research Program. The GAO concluded, "In collaborating on Council work, the agencies face challenges by not having a clear direction or specific resources for their work. For example, key agency officials said that the agencies do not have a strategy that guides and aligns their Council work.

The Arctic Council is a voluntary intergovernmental forum for Arctic States and Native partners to address various environmental and economic issues through projects and reports. For example, the Council has produced assessments of Arctic climate change impacts and shipping.

Federal agencies have acted on some voluntary recommendations that the United States and other Arctic States have adopted through the Arctic Council. However, the Dept of State does not review or track progress made on these actions and faces challenges implementing the voluntary recommendations. Specifically, the State Dept. informally discusses the recommendations with other agencies during monthly meetings but does not have a process to review and track progress the agencies have made toward implementing them. State officials said that the agency may need to more formally assess such progress because, without such a process, the State department does not know the status of recommendation implementation and faces challenges planning for and prioritizing future actions to address Arctic issues. In addition, the United States—with the State Dept. as the lead agency—and other Arctic States face challenges implementing the Council's broad and numerous recommendations. To address these challenges. State officials said that the Council needs to more clearly specify and prioritize recommendations, but the Council does not have guidelines for doing so. Without such guidelines, officials said the recommendations have not historically produced actions with measurable outcomes.

A warming climate and decreased sea ice coverage making marine areas more accessible, have increased global attention to the region's economic opportunities. In 1996, the eight Arctic States— Canada, Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway, the Russian Federation, Sweden, and the United Statesformed the Arctic Council to promote cooperation on various Arctic issues with input from indigenous groups. U.S. Arctic policy highlights the importance of the Council to pursue U.S. Arctic interests.

The GAO recommends that the State Dept. work with relevant agencies to develop a strategy identifying direction for agency Council participation and resource needs; develop a process to review and track progress on recommendations; and work with other Arctic States to develop guidelines for clear and prioritized recommendations.

USFWS introduces polar bear cage to North Slope

Increased shipping traffic over the top of the world and the potential for oil and gas development in the Chukchi and Beaufort Seas have spurred a response to potential oil spills.

This week, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service announced it would ship a specially constructed polar bear holding module and two smaller transport cages to Prudhoe Bay. Alaska Clean Seas, the North Slope's oil spill response organization will permanently store the equipment.

The cage is a custom built stainless steel module, 12 sf. in size and designed to hold a small group of bears. The module is collapsible to make transportation easier. The additional, lighter aluminum cages were designed to transport oiled or sick polar bears from a remote field site back to the main holding module for

The equipment will make it possible for the USFWS to transport, treat and hold polar bears within their home range if an oil spill occurs and not have them taken to Anchorage or elsewhere for treatment, said a USFWS press release.

The two transport cages, a 20-foot storage container, the module and two custom-built polar bear washing tables were paid for by Defenders of

Michels released on reduced bail to third-party custodians

By Diana Haecker

After posting $25,000 bail, Adrienne Michels, who stands accused of a hit-and-run accident that killed Wagner Wongitillin, was released to two court-appointed third party custodians on May 14.

Superior Court Judge Paul Roetman of Kotzebue appointed Josephine Stiles and Jonathon Munn to share third-party custody of Michels. Stiles is the defendant's cousin, Munn is the defendant's younger brother. According to court papers, Michels' father Eric Osborne posted bail and Michels was released from Anvil Mountain Correctional Center.

In a bail hearing on Wednesday, May 14, Superior Court Judge Paul Roetman of Kotzebue reduced the bail set for Michels from $50,000 to $25,000.

Defense attorney Myron Angstman of Bethel asked to have the bail amount cut down to $5,000 with the argument that there "doesn't appear any suggestion that the defendant is flight risk." In terms of posing a threat to the community, Angstman said, "The occurrence of the same incident happening again is remote."

Assistant District Attorney Tom Jamgochian agreed that the possibility of flight would not be an issue, but pointed to the fact that bail was set prior to Judge Roetman's assignment to the case – defense filed a peremptory challenge which bumped Nome Judge Tim Dooley from the case – and that the amount was based on the four initial charges, not the two felony charges on which a grand jury indicted Michels. "Bail is not set for the current charges and therefore should remain at $50,000," Jamgochian said.

Judge Roetman ruled to meet the parties in the middle.

Conditions of release include that Michels should not be in a house where alcohol is kept, should not consume alcohol, should not be in bars or anywhere alcohol is present.

A grand jury indicted Michels on charges of manslaughter-death not murder— a class A felony charge and a charge of leaving an accident scene without assisting the injured, a class C felony. Michels allegedly hit Wagner Wongittillin, 54, of Savoonga with her SUV when driving on Bering Street and Fifth Avenue in the night of April 12. Michels left the scene of the accident on foot and returned later with her father. A Nome Police Dept. affidavit filed on April 14 also charged Michels with driving under the influence, a misdemeanor, and leaving the scene of an accident involving injury or death, also a misdemeanor.

Wongittilin died in the Norton Sound Regional Hospital shortly after the accident.

An omnibus hearing is set for July 16.

BACK IN TOWN— An Arctic tern (Sterna paradisaea) surveys a local pond for food. Arctic terns are known to embark on the longest migration journeys twice a year. Its travel from the Arctic breeding grounds to its wintering grounds off of Antarctica may cover 25,000 miles and is the farthest yearly journey of any bird. An Arctic Tern can live to be at least 34 years old. It usually does not begin to breed until it is three or four years old.

— as well as a $386,000/annum non-BSA contribution for the next three years. NPS projects having 700 students in the next school year, which includes Elementary, Jr. and Sr. High School as well as Anvil City Science Academy and homeschool students.

NPS asked for $2.3 million from the city, a $431,000 increase over last year's local effort contribution by the city.

Finance director Julie Liew laid out three scenarios: 1. Raising the mill rate from its current 11 to 11.25, the City can fund only the mandatory amount of $1.004 million. 2. Bringing the mill rate up to 14 mill, the city can fund NPS at its FY14 level at $1.77 million. 3. Raising the mill rate to 16 mill, the city could fund NPS at the requested level of $2.3 million.

Hold it, said Randy Pomeranz. At first he was not opposed to a slight mill rate increase, but then took it back, saying "leave the mill rate alone." Pomeranz argued that a lot of line items in the budget are never spent or budgeted positions are not filled. These funds are then reverted to the general fund and become available again.

Councilman Culley repeated the City needs to find new revenue streams or cut spending, "so we don't poop in our pants every time we see an increase in numbers," he said

Increasing the sales tax seasonally, looking through books of exemptions, pursuing a tobacco and alcohol sales tax and increasing land fill rates were among the ideas suggested.

City Manager Josie Bahnke drafted a code ordinance that would increase the sales tax rate from 5 percent to 8 percent. This question would go to the voters in form of a proposition. The increase for alcohol sales would approximately bring an additional $150,000 per year into the city's coffers. Levying the tax on to-bacco proves more difficult. "We are still researching tobacco since it is not a commodity that we track separately on our sales tax return form," said Bahnke.

Councilman Stan Andersen looked at School Board President Betsy Brennan and NPS Superintendent Steve Gast who sat in the audience and said that the City might look at an increase of $200,000 or more for NPS, but this has yet to be determined how finances shake out.

After more than two hours of intense discussion, the meeting ended with the promise of another work session to be held this week.

The session is scheduled for Friday, May 23 at noon.

WAITING FOR A NEW PURPOSE— Partners Donny Olson and Jim Gribben purchased the old hospital with the intent of finding a new purpose for the facility.

Norton Sound GO LLC acquired old NSHC hospital

By Diana Haecker

The old Norton Sound regional hospital building has been sold to Norton Sound GO LLC, a company formed specifically to buy and perhaps resell the property.

The two partners who are behind Norton Sound GO LLC are no strangers to Nome. The G stands for Gribben, as in Jim Gribben of California, who has lived for the past eight years seasonally in Nome, experimenting with various gold mining machinery and pioneering the "surf crawlers."

The O stands for Olson, as in Donny Olson of Golovin, physician, reindeer herder and Alaska State Senator for District T.

According to Norton Sound GO communications and marketing assistant Jessa Youngblood, Gribben's daughter, the old hospital sold for $450,000 cash. With the ink on the buyers contract barely dry, the property has been listed on the website nortonsoundgo.com for resale. The company also offers the possibility of a joint venture or for long-term lease.

The two-acre property and several buildings are listed on eBay for a sale price of $2.5 million. "It's available for sale, but only to the buyer with the right development idea," said Youngblood.

The property includes the 1988 built Quyanna Care Center building, with eight double occupancy rooms; the main hospital and emergency room facility built in 1977; and the 1948-built administrative wing.

Youngblood further explained that the dollar figure is derived from a square footage price of $45 – new construction square footage prices range from $150 to $200/sf. "The price posted on eBay is just to get the conversation started," Youngblood said.

The intent behind the purchase and offering for resale is to find the perfect buyer or scenario of projects that would help Nome improve, said Youngblood. "Jim has been in Nome over eight years and Donny is invested in Nome, so both want to make positive impact and breathe life back into the old hospital," Youngblood said.

This was echoed by Donny Olson. "I was born in that hospital, had my tonsils taken out at that hospital and worked as a young doctor at that hospital." Olson told The Nome Nugget. The initial thought was 'How could it serve the people of the Bering Strait region?" Olson added he had no interest in the property when he saw it advertised, but that changed when Gribben, who has a background in real estate investments and property developments, approached Olson about a partnership. Olson and Gribben met in Nome and because of a shared interest in aviation, planes, helicopters, they developed a good rapport with each other.

Olson said if the Port of Nome is expanding and associated traffic with projected Arctic growth happens, Nome needs infrastructure to house more people and to just plain offer more of everything. Olson even pitched the idea of apartments and a mini-mall to be housed in the old hospital.

The website lists conversion possibilities to include upscale condominium development, seasonal housing, large tenant relocation, assisted living and residential care, professional suites, school development or climate controlled storage.

According to Youngblood, NSHC was motivated by Norton Sound GO LLC's cash offer and wanted to divest itself of the property because maintenance costs burdened the health corporation with unnecessary expenses.

The sale closed two weeks ago. Requests to Norton Sound Health Corporation for comment on the sale remained unanswered.

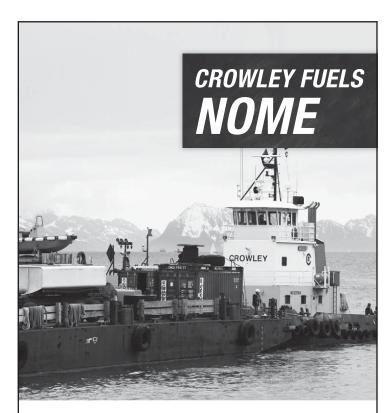

According to City Manager Josie Bahnke, the property was valued at $16 million for property taxes when it functioned as a hospital, but now the property is categorized as a warehouse and is valued at $1.4 for property tax purposes. When it was a hospital, it was Nome property tax exempt.

Norton Sound GO LLC now maintains the hospital, and pays for tax and utilities.

Youngblood said that the company wants to find a local solution and has been in talks with local people already about proposals. However, Youngblood said, those talks have not matured into something substantial quite yet. "Our intent is to be transparent and we want to engage with Nome residents and the City of Nome," said Youngblood. "We would really love to do this with a community partner."

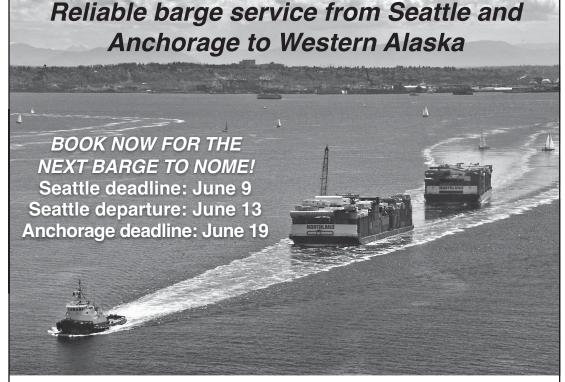

NO MORE EMERGENCIES— The partnership is looking for other entities to repurpose the old NSHC hospital facility.

the days of his childhood and expressed the hope of an Alaska culture evolution that will lead to the recognition of all residents as equals.

From his childhood memories he built a speech that projected a healthy Alaskan society in which people can expect and should demand the same treatment by government and to have the same standards relating to public safety, health care and justice that apply across the board from the largest city to the smallest community.

Mallot drew applause when he said, "In this country, arguably the richest and most free, I believe we should be able to grant affordable health care to all of its citizens."

Mallot spoke about keeping the public good in mind and that many decisions these days are not made with the public good as a guiding value

He spoke about the opportunity Alaska as a resource-rich state has but also the responsibility to develop resources carefully.

For example, he said, the Bristol Bay watershed is a treasure of eons past. "We should have the belief and confidence in our values to be able to say that there are places we will not go to develop our resources," Mallot said.

A healthy society, Mallot said, is bound together by education. He ended his speech with an appeal to invest in education as the true future of the Great Land.

His speech was met with a standing ovation and long applause.

In other business the Alaska Democrats passed resolutions in support of raising the minimum wage, recognizing marriage equality and urging the state to recognize Alaska Natives' legal rights while affirming Alaska Natives' ability to receive information about ballots and other official documents in their native languages.

The party also endorsed overturning Citizens United to stop out-of-state money spent on ads to influence Alaskan voters and those in other states.

A new party platform added to the existing platform statements, reads "Alaska Democrats embrace and support the rights of tribal governments and indigenous Alaskans, as recognized by the federal government and state and federal courts."

jetty and cell that was damaged during the 2011 November storm. In a letter sent to Bahnke, FEMA Regional Administrator Kenneth Murphy wrote "there is concern that the current administrative record is insufficient to support the assertion that the City of Nome has a legal responsibility to repair the Jetty and Jetty Dock facility and that all the identified work is eligible..."

The damage was assessed at $1.5 million but FEMA offered to pay only $300,000. The City appealed four months ago. The appeal was answered with a recent FEMA letter, questioning if the City has the legal responsibility of repairing the facility.

According to Bahnke, the City's attorney is preparing a legal opinion, as is the State of Alaska Attorney General to clarify the City's eligibility to receive federal repair funds. The city has 30 days to respond to FEMA.

In other business, City Engineer John Blees informed the commission that contractor Pacific Pile and Marine (PPM) performed substandard work at the inner harbor high ramp project. The concrete poured to form the high ramp shows gaps under the top flanges of two embedded beams. This could be fixed with a grout infill, Blees said. Insufficient concrete surface could also be fixed with a urethane mortar to fill in low areas and improve the surface of the ramp.

The City withheld $60,000 of the $150,000 job. Blees suggested that the City ask PPM to install the grout infill and demand a substantial amount of credit for the deficient surface as well as a five-year warranty before accepting the concrete ramp work as being completed.

Commissioner Trowbridge said he would not want PPM to get away with sub-par work. Chairman Jim West Jr. agreed. "We should send a clear message, ask for a $60,000 credit," West Jr. said.

The Port Commission recommended that Port Projects Manager Joy Baker contact PPM to take care of the grouting and to convey the City's credit demand.

Harbormaster Lucas Stotts submitted his report to the commission. He asked commissioners for guidance on a problem that seems quite unique: How to avoid heavy tie-off lines from larger ships from getting tangled in armor rock. When larger ships arrive, Port of Nome personnel help the ships tie off by taking the bow and stern lines, attaching them to a truck and pulling the lines taut. The lines run over the rough armor rock and sometimes get snagged in the rocks, Stotts said. Engineers have suggested putting mesh over the rocks in order to prevent the lines being dragged over the rock. Practically, the mesh would be not an ideal solution as it is difficult to stretch chain-link mesh seamlessly over the large rocks.

Ideas were tossed around such as building troughs to feed the lines along, or creating pylons that would hold the lines centered and create a guided path to feed the lines over the rocks.

Former Harbormaster Joy Baker concurred that it's been an ongoing problem. "We have beaten our heads about this for 15 years," she said. Stotts said he called harbors around the state to find out how they deal with the problem, but apparently, other ports have sheet pile facilities or use mooring or berthing dolphins to tie off ships.

The meeting ended with a presentation by a California waterfront infrastructure development firm, Mofatt & Nichols. Although the potential development of the Port of Nome or Port Clarence as Arctic Deep Sea ports is still uncertain, the firm wanted the City and the port commission to know of their existence. Mofatt & Nichols specializes in waterfront engineering, designing and planning marine terminals and lending construction support for everything that has to do with movement of goods from water onto land. The company is relatively small with 620 employees across the coastal U.S. and has a four-employee office VOLUNTEERS— Two drill victims, played by JROTC cadets and a host of Nome and State first responders were part of an exercise to test capabilities to deal with a mass rescue due to an offshore emergency.

Agencies conduct Arctic mass rescue operation exercise

By Diana Haecker

Those who passed by the small boat harbor last Wednesday evening, rest assured, the bodies laying on the ground and the emergency responders hustling to take care of them were part of a drill, not a real life emergency.

The United States Coast Guard and City of Nome personnel conducted a mass rescue operation exercise as part of operation Arctic Shield

According to City of Nome Emergency Coordinator Mimi Farley, the drill's scenario was that an explosion occurred on a cruise ship with 184 passengers and 94 crew, about 30 miles offshore from Nome. The exercise drill included Nome Volunteer Ambulance Department, Nome Volunteer Fire Department, Nome Police Dept., Norton Sound Health Corporation, Port of Nome, NSHC village health aides, State of Alaska Homeland Security & Emergency Management, Alaska State Troopers, U.S. Boarder Patrol & Customs and City of Nome employees

On Tuesday, the drill began with a tabletop exercise at the Public Safety Building. The City of Nome opened the emergency operations center to practice skills in planning, operations, logistics and finance.

"With 184 passengers on board and some injured, this was quite a task for this small group," said Farley.

During the second day, the agencies executed a field exercise at the Nome harbor parking lot with over 80 participants. The responders NVAD, NVFD, NPD, Village Health Aides and State Troopers were able to practice their skills on JROTC cadets. The JROTC program provided 15 live actors dressed up with broken bones, lacerations and burns. The victims were transported to NSHC, which gave NSHC a chance to practice their organization's community medical emergency plan, said Farley.

"There was a briefing after the drill and overall the drill went pretty well," said Farley in an email to The Nome Nugget. "This drill showed what the City of Nome's capabilities were, what type of resources we have and what resources we needed outside of Nome."

In 2013, an estimated 440 vessel transits occurred through the Bering Strait. The Coast Guard said the exercise was designed to identify potential opportunities for improvement in preparedness and response to a maritime emergency in the region. "As maritime commerce and traffic increases through the Bering Strait and the Arctic, it is vital for federal, state, local and tribal governments to work cooperatively to effectively respond in the event of an incident," said Lt. Cmdr. Jason Boyle, of the Coast Guard 17th District prevention department.

Arctic Shield kicked off in January with outreach operations in the region and will conclude in the fall.

The Coast Guard conducts Arctic Shield seasonally to get a better understanding of Arctic and subarctic conditions, the availability of local help and knowledge in order to improve preparedness and response capabilities by testing those capabilities and refining the resource requirements needed for the Arctic region.

Volunteer Fire Fighters Kevin Knowlton, Tania Snowball and Deanne Anelon and Johnny Bahnke III carry a drill victim to safety.

Dear Editor,

I fully support our 2014 Democratic gubernatorial candidate, Byron Mallot. Byron treats all people equally just as we would like to be treated by others. He is 100% committed to the Alaskan Constitution even if it were to be amended!

Byron Mallot seeks responsible resource development but goes on to say, that all areas in Alaska need not to be developed in order to protect substance rights of all Alaskan peoples!

He will be a strong leader in Alaska's future. This candidate is very wise and has worked under many of our US Presidents.

If he is elected it will be a "win-win" opportunity for all of us. These are exciting times for positive changes in Alaska.

Martina and I also support the Democratic candidate for US Congress, Forrest Dunbar who, when elected at 29 years of age will be older than Congressman, Don Young when he was first elected to the US Congress. He shares many of the values of Byron Mallot. He is smart and is willing to help Alaska be a better place to live for all.

Respectfully,

School Board recognizes retiring teachers, reviews financial woes

By Kristine McRae

At last week's meeting, the Nome Board of Education recognized three longtime teachers for their dedication to the students of Nome. Elementary school teachers Marie Saclamana, Nancy Tungwenuk, and Mari Lammer are retiring after a combined 60 years of service to the district.

As she accepted flowers from Board President Betsy Brennan, a grateful Saclamana talked about her time at Nome Elementary prior to taking time away for cancer treatments last year. "I miss all of you. Thank you all, I would teach forever if I could," Saclamana said. Tungwenuk is retiring after 23 years as a kindergarten teacher, and seemed shy as she spoke to a packed audience. "I'm used to talking to kindergartners," said Tungwenuk. "It's been a great journey. I've taught children and their children, but I haven't had any grandchildren in my class yet." Brennan then acknowledged Mari Lammer, who said that she had taught grandkids of students and is soon to be a grandmother herself. "I thank my family for their support to pursue my passion for education. I have been fortunate to do many things in the district throughout the years," Lammer said.

For the third time in his four years at Nome-Beltz, graduating senior Cass Mattheis was recognized as the Nome-Beltz student of the month. High School teacher Kent Runyon said Cass's teachers have described him as persistent, kind, tall, personable, friendly, respectful, and hard working. Teacher Hana Jones presented junior high student of the month to Donald Smith, saying he was an awesome student to have in class. Other teachers noted Donald's sense of humor and willingness to learn. "I believe I got this award not only because I did this," Smith said, "but also from all my teachers, even those from elementary school. And, with a smile to his former teachers, "even Ms. Tungwenuk and Ms. Lammer, and a lot of others. I'd like to thank them all."

In a brief address to the board, Youth Obesity Prevention Advocate Kelsey Beecher spoke to members about district policies for Wellness. With new policies recently passed by the Alaska Association of School Boards at the state level, Beecher encouraged the Nome Board to consider some suggested changes when revisiting their policies. "I have looked at your current policy and I've added in what the state suggests and other suggestions from our grant," Beecher said, "like more exercise. Please consider these while making new policies." Beecher also offered her assistance in making the changes.

Lynette Smith thanked Nome Public Schools for its continued support of the Nome Extensions School. This past year of adjustment to new regulations has been difficult for both the district and families. We've powered through the bumps and setbacks because Extensions is worth Smith said. She acknowledged administration, staff, and faculty for keeping the program running and looks forward to increased enrollment in the future. "We hope the Nome Board of Education will continue to encourage and support its administration and staff in the oversight of our small, but mighty, Nanook school.'

Behind the Scenes

A drastic reduction in the funding which supports the education of Nome students, as well as many programs and activities, has school board members nervous about the upcoming school year. In an update to the board, business manager Paula Coffman outlined changes in expenditures and revenues for the current year.

The numbers are of interest because some monies, which are not being used this year, can be added to the FY 15 budget, which will leave the district less in the red for next year. "The reduction in the fund balance is not going to be quite as steep as the last revision," Coffman said, "The current deficit we expect is $214,081, which is down from over $300,00 before."

Any deficit to the district's fund balance is cause for concern. The board discussed recent conversations with the Nome City Council concerning the amount of money the district can expect to receive from the city. Typically, and based on the local mill rate, the City is directed to give the school district a certain amount of money from state dollars.

Board President Betsy Brennan noted that, although the City has for the last couple of years given the district about 60 percent of the maximum amount allowed, the actual dollar contribution hasn't increased. "We've had flat funding for FY13 and FY14, and I think it needs to be something that we need to project to the city. We know we're asking for a lot more, but we've fought hard the last couple of years. As a district and community, we need to talk to our council members, and plead our case." Brennan said.

Board member Barb Nickels also acknowledged the City's past commitments. "The City has been gracious, and they've typically been in the 60 percent range of the money maximum they're allowed to give us, and this year it's 48 percent," Nickels said, "So it's actually less, and it will affect the quality of the kids' education." Superintendent Steve Gast agreed. "We're talking big numbers," he added, "not nickel and diming, and these cuts will actually cut personnel." In a discussion about how to save money, Brennan suggested talking to the City about the shared responsibility of Nome's swimming pool. "It doesn't make sense that we're paying for the utilities, and then we're paying for our students to use the pool," Brennan said. Another funding variable that was unknown until recently is the state's base student allotment (BSA), which was expected to go up as much as $400 per student but only rose about $100.

Beltz accreditation

Nome-Beltz principal Scott Handley announced that after a comprehensive visit from the state, the jr/sr high school is fully accredited. "They went into every classroom, talked with kids, looked over our surveys, and did a variety of interviews," Handley said. "They saw some powerful practices at the school. They were impressed with our new teacher induction program, especially the cultural training camp." Handley also said that the team was impressed with the relationship-building practices between teachers and students. "Staff consistently showed that the wellbeing of their students is paramount. Every one of the students said there was at least one person they could talk to on a regular basis."

The junior high also received a positive evaluation on the Pathways Grant, which is administered by Nome Eskimo Community. The essence of the program is comprehensive teaching through placebased learning. According to Handley, gains from the program include an increase in attendance as well as academic achievement.

Upcoming opportunities for Beltz students include an eighth grade vocational academy, an orienteering and GPS class with Colonel Blake of JROTC, and an Inupiaq class through the UAF northwest campus.

Concerns over test data

Board member Barb Amarok expressed concern over test score data. "I get that it's a snapshot," Amarok said, "but 77 percent are not proficient in writing, and there are high percentages not proficient in other subjects. Are we doing something about that? Kids who aren't doing

SAFETY ON WHEELS (top)—Five-year old Trevor White is guided by DOT safety specialist Stephanie Holmquist from Juneau through a bike course set up at the Nome Elementary School parking lot.

Safety Fair offers broad spectrum of safety education

By Diana Haecker

Putting out fires, breathing through a straw after running around the gym and riding bikes around a tricky obstacle course were part of the fun at the third annual Safety Fair held at the Nome Elementary School gym on Saturday, May 17.

The event was organized by Kendra Nichols-Takak with Norton Sound Health Corporation's Injury Prevention program and brought together a wide variety of information how to navigate safely through life as a kid —or a grownup.

Part of the Elementary School parking lot had an obstacle course for bike riders. Kids brought their two-wheels and drove them around the tightly spaced cones, guided by Alaska Dept. of Transportation safety specialist Stephanie Holmquist. Nome Police Department employee Renee Lammer registered bikes and educated kids on locking portation is safe from being borrowed or stolen – a perennial occurrence in the summer.

Inside the NES gym, the Nome Friends of the NRA's Steve Smith educated kids on the three most important things when handling guns: always point them in a safe direction, never put your finger on the trigger and never load the gun unless you're actually shooting.

Those are the things that one expects from a safety fair. But there are also small dangers that can have big consequences. Susan Wolf with PAWS of Nome educated Safety Fair participants on the importance to scoop the poop after their dogs went potty. Parasites and worms are transmitted in dog poop and just the simple act of picking up after your dog keeps diseases in check.

Kawerak Inc.'s Wellness Program presented information on the Green Dot program, which tries to develop civil courage in individuals and change society to not tolerate bullying, verbal and physical abuse or violence any longer. Instead, the program wants to safely educate people how to become 'green dots' or safe havens for those who experience bullying or violence.

Everybody knows that alcohol impairs one's proper functions and in order to show how alcohol influences the body, Kawerak's Marjorie Tahbone put so called 'drunk goggles' on kids. The goggles mimic the sense of disorientation people feel under the influence of alcohol. Kids who are usually very coordinated missed High Five's and couldn't hit a wastebasket when throwing a paper ball.

Nome Community Center educated kids on the effects of tobacco – with a new twist. Tobacco Prevention Specialist Spruce Lynch sent a group of kids around the gym at a fast walk for a couple of rounds. At the end, as the kids were huffing and puffing from the exercise, they were given straws to breathe through. That's right, most of them were pretty short of breath and that's how smokers feel. A slideshow of cigarette butts littering the country and outdoor scenery pointed to a problem seldom talked about: the unhealthy effects cigarette butts have on the earth, wildlife and water. Photos depicted cigarette butts found in dead fish. "If birds ingest cigarette butts, they die," said Lynch.

Nome Volunteer Fire Fighters lighted a real fire outside the Nome Elementary School and let kids use a fire extinguisher to put out the flames.

The Local Emergency Planning Committee distributed yellow safety vests and reminded people to have a plan, if emergencies strike.

The Coast Guard was present and handed out tips for boating safety and whistles.

Kids in Nome are fortunate to be surrounded by grandiose backcountry and the National Park Service dished out some advice on what plants are OK to eat such as blueberries, black berries, some young willow leaves, and which plants are poisonous, such as monk's hood and wild irises. Alaska Fish and Game handed out little booklets on animal track identification and safety tips for the great outdoors.

Safety Fair participants – even if they didn't win prizes in the raffles – left the gym with bags full of informational material and gadgets to remind them throughout the year to place the importance of safety first.

READY FOR ACTION— Trevor White of Nome is ready to hit the parcour wearing gloves and a properly fitted helmet for protection.

Margie Kigrook Ningealook

Ishgauk Ningealook was born to Annie Tocktoo and Harry Kigrook on October 8, 1932 in Shishmaref. She died December 20, 2013 surrounded by her children and grandchildren. She was a loving mother, sister, aunt, grandmother and great grandmother.

married Andrew Ningealook on January 20, 1957 and together they had eight children.

Margie completed third grade at the Shishmaref School. She enjoyed sewing, knitting, and especially doing puzzles with her niece Elsie and granddaughter Valerie. She enjoyed spending time with her grandchildren and she would always like to go to the meat racks to watch and help her children put meat away.

Traditional native food, lifestyle and sewing was important and mom made sure she taught these skills to her children, also going to camp when she was able to and sitting outside of her house. She also enjoyed time with her sister Fannie looking for "the" in newspapers and was thankful for the presence of Valerie, Darrell and Andy Jr. Back when her husband Andrew was alive she would help him feed the dogs. She also babysat for numerous families.

Margie, her sister Fannie and brother James looked forward to the berry-picking season, this was the time their sisters Doris, Flora and Nellie would come home to Shishmaref. They shared large family gatherings of meals, visiting and were all together again. Memories of their childhood, parents and stories were shared with us children and grandchildren. Humor was always present with each gathering and each sibling had their own unique way to make everyone laugh. We are thankful for the close bond they shared, which is now passed on to her children and grandchildren of the Kigrook family. With great love of her children, grandchildren and family, mom will be greatly missed.

Margie is survived by her children Danny, Mary and Francis, Harry, Evelyn and Daniel, Dora and Warren. Frieda and Fred, and Edna and Carlos. Grandchildren and great grandchildren Andrew T.-Kathriann, Norman-Charely, Madison, Roxann, Leandra, Bradley, Maya, Christa, Travis-Clarissa, Shayla, Kimberly, Andrew-Kelsi, Ida, Gary, Carter, George, Jane-Kaylee, Kenneth, Kalum, Kaysen, Ward-Alicia, Con-Brennan, May-Benjamin, Lance, Colin, James, Helen-Veronica, Andrew S.-Andy Jr., Orion, Pancho, Marie-Jacob, Ida, Gertie-Leslie, Kenny, Rosie, Danny Jr., Jeweliann, Bernice, Anna-Brittany, Charles, Andrew M.-Brian, Baby Andrew, Dallas-Shane, Kiera, Irene-Quinten, Melvin, Barbara, Valerie, Alfred, Vicki, Lloyd, Reuben, Daniel, Jade, Emily, Ernest, Brenna, Jasper, Andrew J.-Trent, Dolly-Rylan, Jackie-Brent, Nellie, Darrell, Hattie, Delbert, Beverly, Carlos, Andrew, and Lillian.

Doris Kigrook "Teegok" Fisher

Auntie Doris was an avid hunter, trapper and learned how to fish from her papa. She learned how to sew for her Mama, Annie, and Grandma Beulah. She helped her mama and papa with raising her brother and sisters. Her activities included knitting, crocheting, sewing, and she loved being at the Native Arts and Craft shows.

Auntie Doris had many friends, namely Mary Lou Leavitt, who traveled to many places with auntie. She kept many family members close to her heart; *Grandma Dolly Vestal, *May Thompson, Agnes Magby, Pauline Sundemeir, Auntie Geraldine Kiyutelluk, and Alice Collins, to name a few. She loved berry picking, camping, and she had a booming laugh. Auntie Doris loved a good practical joke. She was very honest about things; she didn't hold anything back.

Her Mama died in 1948; she stepped in as a surrogate mother to her brother and sisters. Her Papa moved them to Kotzebue shortly thereafter, making things easier on the family; Kotzebue had a lot more to offer for a family. Auntie Doris has worked in many positions; she was a waitress and cook for Wein Airlines. Eventually, she moved to Anchorage and worked at the old Native Hospital; she worked in he kitchen until she retired. She married Allen W. #### Andrew K. Johnson March 4, 1926 - April 29, 2014

Andy Johnson passed April 29, 2014 at the age of $8-years old at the Alaska Native Medical Center following a day surgery that pinned his hip from a fall. On his release day Andy had a heart attack and passed away in his sleep.

Andy's father came to Alaska from Trondhiem, Norway in 1882. His name was John, Sr. He settled in Bristol Bay to fish. Andy's mother was Anna Paningayaq and was from Nelson Island. Anna died when Andy was 4-years old.

John, Sr., his father, did his best to fish and provide for his son's. He also had a reindeer herd and built sailboats in the mid 1920s. A sailboat was all folks could use to fish in the Bristol Bay as motorboats were outlawed.

John, Sr., Andy's dad placed his four sons in the Moravian Children's in Kwethluk near Bethel because he became too sick to care for his son. Andy's dad John, Sr. died from stomach cancer when Andy was the age of nine-years old.

Andy was a commercial fisherman most of his life. He fished on crab boats in his younger years out of Kodiak and fished along side his brother Tommy Johnson, Sr. Andy had his own Bristol Bay Permit. After the many season's Tommy and Andy fished in Bristol Bay, Tommy bought Andy a fishing boat. Andy worked through the Operating Engineer Local 302 in the off-season, and was later brought to Nome to help his brother Tommy and Myrtle Johnson of Nome. Tommy felt Andy needed family and brought him to Nome. Andy was never married or had children. It went to show how much his older brother looked up towards his younger brother.

Andy was a Bering Strait Native Corporation Shareholder along with Sitnasuak Native Corporation, and enrolled with Nome Eskimo Community here in Nome.

Andy is survived by his brother Dan and Gold Johnson of Kenai. His nephews Jack and Carol Johnson of Nome and his nephews and nieces of Kenai through Dan and Goldie Johnson of Kenai.

Andy was preceded in death by his parents John and Anna Paningayaq Johnson; brother John Jr.-Thomas (Tommy) Johnson of Nome, and nephew Thomas Jr. (Echo) Johnson.

Andy will be missed by family and friends and was buried next to his brother Thomas (Tommy) Johnson in Golovin on Mother's Day, May 11,

Most of his younger years were in Nome with his grandparents Michael (Papa) and Marie (Akorak) Saclamana sharing custody with his mother Carol Marlin His Nome as a child was shared with his brother Jeffrey and uncle John. The three of them were always together. At about the age of 10 he gained his three wonderful cousins (who considered him their brother) Ugi, Gal and Keven. Michael left Nome in 2004 to see his mother Carol and grandparents John and Wilma in Sacramento, leaving many friends and family missing him. Michael decided to live in Sacramento. He and his stepfather Mike formed a bond and grew to love each other. Mike spent a lot of time with Michael teaching him the art of building and construction.

He also loved Nome and always looked forward to speaking to his Akorak and called her frequently, promising to come home for a visit

We lost Michael unexpectedly on April 24, 2014.

One of the most loved things about Michael's personality was his ability and the pleasure he found in saying I love you...anywhere, anytime. Michael's happiness had the ability to make others happy. Repealing SB 21 will tell legislators to write a law that provides a fair share for our oil, and effective oil production incentives. Allowing corporations to take the billions they'll get from a reduced Alaska share, to spend on their foreign oil operations, isn't a fair partnership. Reasonable tax breaks should be earned by investing in Alaska.

The Disappearing Tax Rate: SB 21 includes an ill-conceived handout that makes fatter profits for oil corporations, but little sense for you. It was falsely billed as an incentive for "new oil." The trouble is it pretended to "incentivize" oil that was already being produced.

This provision hands out a roughly 40 percent reduction on SB 21's already low oil tax. Forty percent off 27 percent is roughly 16 percent. That's a banana republic rate.

This 40 percent cut to Alaska's revenue share applies to most new oil that will ever be produced in Alaska, and to fields where production had been announced years before SB 21.

It applies to Point Thomson, where Exxon illegally withheld production for 30 years. In 2007 Alaska finally filed legal proceedings to force Exxon to honor lease requirements to develop this field. SB 21 gives Exxon a 40 percent reward for illegal behavior, on oil it was already required to pro-

This false "incentive" applies to Oooguruk and Nikaitchuq, which began production before SB 21. That oil also wasn't "incentivized" by this 40 percent handout.

It applies to fields companies long ago announced would be produced under ACES (the law SB 21 replaced). These include Conoco's NPR-A CD-5 unit, Mustang, the southwest corner of Kuparuk, and other fields corporation-hired TV actors falsely claim are a miraculous result of SB 21.

Smart policy means NOT giving away billions for production that was already going to happen.

This 40 percent revenue reduction (which varies slightly with oil prices and costs), shaved from an already reduced state share, applies to new pools of oil in high-profit fields, like Prudhoe Bay, and to all future fields. SB 21's current, low 27 percent rate will keep falling. As old fields are replaced with new ones, all fields will eventually get this 40 percent reduced rate. Disappearing Production: Alaska's "Revenue Sourcebook" forecasts

North Slope production will decline under SB 21 by over 40 percent in the next decade, from over 500,000 barrels/day today to roughly 300,000 barrels/day. The actors on those corporation-funded ads shamelessly call a 40 percent decline "more production"

State forecasts also show less oil under SB 21 than under ACES. The state has forecasted more North Slope oil by 2022 under ACES (spring, 2013 ACES report) than under SB 21 (April, 2014 SB 21 report).

To spur local investment, we should require companies to invest IN ALASKA to earn reasonable tax breaks. Letting them spend Alaska tax breaks Outside is one reason for this decline.

And Scott Goldsmith's report? It concedes SB21 would have reduced Alaska revenue by over $1 billion/yr. if it were in place at 2012 and 2013's higher oil prices. SB 21 should be replaced by a law letting Alaskans share fairly when high prices create staggering corporate profits. Rep. Les Gara (D-Anchorage) can be reached at rep.les.gara@akleg.gov.

port every person to reach out and take advantage of opportunities that life presents them with, especially when it comes to furthering your education and giving yourself the tools needed to improve your life. And we need to remember that education isn't just going to college; too often kids are told that college is the only option after high school, but that is not true. Every time my car is serviced, a house is built, or electricity is restored after a power outage, we can thank a well-paid tradesperson.

Do you want to drive the bus or just ride along?

Regardless of what financial situation you may find yourself, education isn't out of your reach, especially for our Native children. If you want it badly enough, and are willing to work hard and long enough to get it, you can get the tools you will need to make yourself into an engineer, lawyer, preacher, or electrician. The only thing than can stop you from becoming an important piece of society – from becoming that person who helps determine what happens – is you.

Ashley's graduation was special for our family. Like many rural Alaskan families, we grew up dreaming college was a million miles away. But with the support of my parents I became the first in my family to graduate college. Later my sister, Debbie, graduated as well. I had a few cousins graduate before me and have seen a few more graduate since my sister and I did.

Getting a college degree was something our great-grandparents may have never dreamed of as they watched others with fancy titles and degrees determine important decisions for them. The opportunity for many of our great-grandparents just wasn't there to determine if they would drive the bus.

It is something that is within reach of almost every Alaskan today, Native or otherwise.

Fort Lewis College is a prime example of a tool that is within the reach of every Alaska Native youngster. A former Indian school that later become a college, Native Americans and Alaska Natives can attend Fort Lewis tuition-free.

It thrills me to see that some of our children are taking advantage of the tools that are available to them. This year's trip to Durango marked the second year in a row that my family and I have traveled outside to attend a college graduation. I'm sure many other families are doing the same, with the hope deep inside that their graduates will forge out nice, productive lives that will cast honor on their family's history.

The more Alaskans that go to college and vocational school, the better it will be for their families, their futures and the future of Alaska as a whole.

I know as Kiana and I watched Ashley receive her degree, we were looking at our two young daughters and knowing deep inside that we wanted them to go to college and get the tools that will make their lives better. We, like every parent alive, want our daughters to drive their own bus.

The children can't do it by themselves, however. We, as a society, need to work with the youth in our families, and those in our communities, to promote and support our students. We need to push them to work hard, to attend college or vocational training, and to take advantage of what life has to offer.

We can help make sure our children are driving the bus, and going where they want to go.

Congratulations, Ashley and the graduates of 2014, you now have the keys.

Jason Evans, Nome, AK

Dear Editor,

I was fortunate enough to be able to attend the Elders & Youth Conference, when I got to see some of my elder friends and meet new ones. I just made the mistake of thanking NSEDC too much and lost my ticket home, so I wanted to thank Dave Olson for letting me come home—

Quyanna-buk to Dave and Bering Air. Also to Fran (our former Medicine Lady), who teaches me more about the body and how to massage it, every time I see her, Quyanna-buk to you too, I really appreciate it.

Some of the things I learned while I was there are: If I really would like to have my concerns about NSHC looked into I would put attn: Lance at BHS, P.O. Box 966, Nome, AK 99762 and maybe you'd get some follow through.

Also, as the day progresses our bodies lose salt, and that's why we have cramps. A couple of things that help that are Gatorade or vitamin water. Some people use mustard, if it gets too bad. I use a heating pad. Some people say they boil onionskin and drink that and they don't get cramps for a good while.

There are different resources out there for our Elders. They can Google places like the Arctic Access—which can help with bath/shower bars, do shower stalls, and build ramps for them, as long as thy have their funding, to places like Alzheimer's and ResCare—which helps provide care or chores done for our Elders. Of which I would like to thank, not only the agencies, but also the workers who provide that care—Quyanna-buk for your willingness to do that, I know it takes a lot of patience.

Boy, you should have seen some of the beautiful artwork that I saw. I guess, lucky for me that my check hadn't reached home before I went to Nome. Keep up the good job people—autii that work.

What I think about the suicides: Why are there so many? Are they, trying to reach out, and people are not hearing them? Are they keeping it in because thy think people will think they're lying? Do they think that because of what was done to them, people would pity them, or talk about them, or despise them? I say that every last one of us counts. We were put no this earth for a specific reason. We may have been given those experiences so that we could be stronger. I know I tried to break some of the chain of abuse by not drinking, so my kids and other people could feel safe. Although, it has been hard to be a single parent, I wouldn't trade my kids for the world. I just don't like some of the things they are, or aren't, doing to themselves. I know what my kids are capable of, and it saddens me that they aren't doing so.

One of my solutions would be: I want to tell my people, since you can be whatever you want to be, and since there is still some funding out there for you, if I was you-I'd take two other people with me and I'd go do training somewhere. I think I would see if that person would like to go into the same profession as I want to, so we could back each other up on jobs. The other person I'd have along is someone who would like to be our Office Manager/Bookkeeper. Then, when we're done with our schooling, at the moment, there are grants out there that can help start a bussiness, we should be able to work on the things we enjoy doing. Just don't room together, you might lose a friend that way. Trouble is, people like me, could never figure out what I wanted to be, so every so often I take more college courses. I suppose—at least I learn more.

Remember, everyone is human, and we are supposed to treat each other the way we would like to be treated, with respect.....

Take care everyone. I'll finish my ranting in a different letter. Don't forget to be safe, and if its your life you are thinking of ending, and the person you tried to talk to isn't listening, please go see someone else, because you do count.

As always, Karen Nanouk Unalakleet, AK 99684

Hand, foot and mouth disease:

How to stop the spread of a viral childhood illness

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Schools in the region have reported an increase in reported cases of hand, foot, and mouth disease.

Before you dismiss this as a joke, let me clarify. This is not "foot in mouth" disease, a recurrent tendency to blurt out embarrassing oral rash may make swallowing food and fluid difficult. Often doctors will prescribe a "magic mouthwash" to soothe the oral lesions long enough to allow oral intake of fluid. Acetaminophen or ibuprofen may also be used for comfort.

In general the illness, including the rash, lasts for 3-6 days.

Parents can help prevent the spread of the virus by keeping shared objects clean and teaching children good hand washing habits.

Hand, foot, and mouth disease mimics a few more serious diseases. Children with more alarming signs of illness such as high fever, altered mental status, shortness of breath, be seen by a medical professional to joint pain, or abdominal pain should evaluate for more serious causes of the rash.

The rash is caused by a virus, usually the coxsackie virus, which begins in the mouth and spreads over several days to the hands and

The virus is spread orally among children who frequently place shared objects in the mouth or by fecal-oral transmission when unclean objects are placed in the mouth.

The illness begins with a mild fever and malaise. Often children have a decreased appetite for the few days leading up to the rash formation.

The rash forms first on the inner lip and anterior gums and may spread to the tongue, palate, and uvula. It appears yellow with a red halo. Often the rash is painful.

The rash then spreads to the hands and feet appearing as a red spot that may form a vesicle. Sometimes other parts of the body are involved.

The illness is contagious until the rash resolves. Infected children should be kept home from school or daycare until the rash resolves.

Hand washing for caregivers and cleaning of shared objects such as toys and utensils is crucial because the virus is almost exclusively passed from one person to another through oral droplets or fecal contamination.

There is no treatment that will kill the virus. Care is supportive.

Oral hydration is important throughout the illness. The painful

Alaska Court clears liability case against Juneau gun dealer for trial Brady Center represents family of man shot, killed by fugitive with suspiciously acquired gun

An Alaska judge has approved a trial in a lawsuit brought by the family of Simone Kim, of Juneau, against the gun dealer that supplied his killer with a gun. This suit is the first case in Alaska that seeks to hold a gun dealer liable for an alleged negligent transfer of a firearm resulting in injury or death.

Judge Philip M. Pallenberg of the Superior Court of the State of Alaska at Juneau denied defendant Ray Coxe's summary judgment motion late Friday, May 2. Judge Pallenberg had earlier dismissed the case, but in February 2013, the Supreme Court of Alaska unanimously reversed that decision (Kim v. Coxe).

"Simone Kim was a caring and creative young man, simply doing his job, when his life was taken from him by a crazed fugitive who had no business getting his hands on a gun," said Jonathan Lowy, director of the Legal Action Project at the Brady Center to Prevent Gun Violence and co-counsel for the Kim family. "The court correctly decided the Kim family is entitled to its day in court, to prove to a jury that a gun dealer irresponsibly supplied a weapon to Simone's killer, and is partly responsible for Simone's death."

The Brady Center to Prevent Gun Violence's Legal Action Project and the Choate Law Firm in Juneau filed suit on behalf of Kim's family on July 31, 2008. The complaint alleges that gun dealer Ray Coxe allowed meth-addicted fugitive Jason Coday to leave his store with the rifle Coday used to shoot and kill Kim, a 26-year-old stranger who was murdered while painting outside a supermarket. The suit alleges that Coxe engaged in an illegal sale of the gun to Coday without a Brady background check.

"Everyone understands that dealers should act responsibly to prevent criminals and other dangerous people from obtaining firearms. After almost six years of fighting for justice, the Kims finally have their chance to present their case before a jury to decide whether it was reasonable for this gun dealer to enable Simone's killer to obtain a deadly weapon," added Lowy.

Attorney Mark Choate of the Choate Law Firm is co-counsel for the Kim family along with Jonathan Lowy.

For 25 years, the Brady Center's Legal Action Project has been the only law group in the country representing victims of gun violence in high-impact lawsuits to reform gun industry practices that contribute to gun violence. The Brady Center has won landmark precedents holding irresponsible gun companies accountable in courts across the country, including Alaska, California, Florida, Indiana, Kansas, Massachusetts, New York, Ohio, Utah, Washington, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

Congress passes legislation to open doors for public-private partnerships in Arctic port development

By Diana Haecker

Congress passed the Water Resources Reform and Development Act last week, a bill that includes amendments, which can change the way the Army Corps of Engineers is building ports in the Arctic.

The $12.3 billion water projects bill authorized 34 new projects over the next 10 years.

Other than authorizing big new flood control projects in the lower 48, amendments inserted by Senators Lisa Murkowski and Mark Begich may overhaul how port and harbor projects are built in Alaska. A section in the bill specifically addresses Arctic ports and expands the authority of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to pursue partnerships with state, local and tribal governments to develop deepwater ports in the Arctic.

Under Section 5022, the bill reads,

"(a) The Secretary may provide technical assistance, including planning, design, and construction assistance, to non-Federal public entities, including Indian tribes [...] for the development, construction, operation, and maintenance of channels, harbors, and related infrastructure associated with deep draft ports for purposes of dealing with Arctic development and security needs."

MEMORIAL DAY — Nome VFW and American Legion members led a Memorial Day parade from Front Street to the Nome Cemetery and Belmont Point.

Nome honors its veterans and military service members

By Diana Haecker

Overcast skies and cool temperatures didn't keep a large number of Nomeites from joining members of the VFW and the American Legion and their respective Auxiliaries in a parade and for a Memorial Day service at the Nome Cemetery and at Belmont Point.

The parade started at 10 a.m. in front of the Post office on Front Street and went via Bering Street and Seppala Drive to the Nome Cemetery. Nome JROTC cadets followed the color guard; the women with the VFW and American Legion Auxiliaries marched in the middle. Mayor Denise Michels and a few other Nome residents brought up the rear. People lined Front Street and parts of Seppala Drive, waving small U.S. flags and saluting the military members – past and present — who carried the flags.

At the cemetery, the crowd gathered to hear the blessings by Chaplain Aaron Cooper and speeches by VFWAuxiliary President Peggy Darling and Commander of the VFW Nome Post Jake Kenick.

Jenny Shield sang the National Mayor Denise Michels read Governor Sean Parnell's Memorial Day resolution. "The patriotism displayed by those who wear the uniform is a bedrock value shared by veterans who have gone before us, and who have selflessly given all for us as a people and for the United States. It's why every day we honor all who have made that ultimate sacrifice," said Parnell's statement.

Peggy Darling also reminded those present that those who joined the armed services to defend the country and the American freedom do so with courage, pride, selflessness and dedication to a cause greater than themselves.

VFW Nome Post Commander Jake Kenick said ours is a region that has a history of service to the nation. "Our great land remains free because of those who answered the nation's call." Kenick said.

"Nome's Memorial Day makes me proud," he said. "Volunteers clean the cemetery and plant flags."

After Jason Gilder played taps, the procession moved on to Belmont Point to honor sailors lost at sea with two wreaths.

Vietnam Veteran Jack Brown of White Mountain and Leora Kenick placed flower wreaths in the Snake River.

Council continues to discuss budget

By Diana Haecker

The Nome Common Council met in a work session on May 23 in an effort to finalize the City of Nome's FY15 budget. The big question that hangs over the Council's head is: to what extent to finance Nome's Public Schools?

Nome Public Schools are asking for $2.3 million from the City.

The State of Alaska contributes nearly $10.9 million to NPS and requires the city to pay a minimum of $1.004 million. In order to fully fund the schools, NPS asked for an additional $1.3 million from the City.

But on the table is the offer that the City would chip in $1.004 million plus $215,000, which was suggested during a previous work session.

As Council members were trying to find new revenue streams or ways to save, they came across an item in the budget worksheet that offered a bit of hope. At the end of the 'have' column was a $272,454.00 contingency. Council members debated if that money could be given to the NPS. This would bring the City's so-called "local effort contribution" up to $1.491 million, more than the bare bones contribution, but less than the $2.3 million NPS hoped for.

City of Nome legal counsel Brooks Chandler was present telephonically and clarified a few points the Common Council had asked during a previous work session on May 14.

NJUS takes on wind, water and fuel issues

By Nancy McGuire

Board members of the Nome Joint Utility System discussed the need to maximize the wind usage from the wind farm and they want to know how much wind power is available.

Wind

The wind generators are running lower than what NJU would like. Board member Carl Emmons said.

"We need an incentive to use wind power, but we have nowhere to put it." It can't always be fed back into the power plant.

Fred Moody suggested heating the Moonlight Springs water with the reserve wind power. Berda Willson stated NJU wants to "utilize as much of the wind power as practical."

There are currently 15 operating units at the wind farm. Last weekend one of Banner's Entegrity turbines had the weld break on its anchor and the tower went down.

Another unit was destroyed when it first began operation, another had a delaminated blade, and yet another was taken down and utilized for spare parts.

Water

There have been some instances of the Moonlight water line flow to the jail being interrupted.

This has caused an air lock requiring back feeding of the line to clear air. Crews are pursuing the cause of the matter

Mike Erdman, sewer and water engineer, will soon be in Nome and NJU will consult with him on options to provide air relief portals along the line and configuration at the jail to confirm that backflow prevention is in place. Controls will be fine-tuned.

It was also noted that heavy equipment possibly rolled over the waterline at Moonlight Springs. Gravity feeds the water through the line from Moonlight Springs to town.

NJU Manager John Handeland states that power plant operations are normal and they have now begun periodic testing of the switching between the new and old power plants and that all power plant operators are proficient in the procedure. NJU will then begin routine operation of the old Caterpillar units for periods of time when their capacity matches the community load and wind farm outputs.

Linemen have been straightening poles and NJU has been coordinating with the city on power enhance-

Letters —

Dear Editor:

Once again we are confronted already by accumulation of human waste and garbage on our beaches left by miners camping there. Yes, it's caused by them. We, Nome residents, do not defecate on our beaches where we walk and play and have picnics with our families and friends; nor do we leave our plastic grocery bags or remnants of our picnics nor do we not pick up our dogs' poops when we walk them on our "golden beaches" hoping high tides or storms will wash them out to sea. Our beautiful Bering Sea, our fishing, crabbing and recreational Bering Sea. Nope! It's all the fault of the miners!

What's to be done? Hmmmm. Our beaches are public only to the high tide line but above that line, beaches are privately owned, City owned and Sitnasuak owned. Miners live, because they're not stupid, above the high tide mark; they are renters or lessees on that land.

Would anyone expect to rent or lease a living space in Nome, inside City limits, without an expectation of bathroom facilities or garbage collection units? Our beaches are within City limits.

What is our responsibility as citizens and/or landlords to provide the very basics of sanitation to our renters, lessees, and visitors?

Granted, as responsible citizens, we should all pick up and dispose of our own "crap." Wouldn't it be as socially responsible for landlords to provide garbage receptacles and Port-a-potties at strategic areas along the beaches for use by all? To my knowledge, there is only one Port-apotty on our beaches: at East End Beach.

What about tourists? We're all promoting tourism, we're all grateful to them for what they contribute to our economy and to our good spirits. The NW Passage opening will bring even more visitors who will want to take advantage of all of Nome, including our famous beaches. They come for adventure, to experience clean air, pristine waters, and welcoming people.

Imagine their surprise, walking on our beaches, being confronted by piles of human and dog feces, flapping plastic grocery bags, used condoms, and whole or broken glass beer bottles or aluminum cans. So pretty. And, even maybe more important, no places for them to responsibly relieve themselves or to dispose of the plastic or paper wrappers of their beach snacks, their wellintended efforts to be responsible world visitors to our lovely beaches stymied by lack of facilities.

What to do? Every entity and person seems to be passing the buck, mired in the sludge of shame, trying to lift arms to point to the responsibility of others, wringing guilty hands in frustration. Let's blame the Miners! We are helpless in their wake and waste! Whew! That was easy.

How about we all take some responsibility? Citizens: pick up and take home the remnants of your own picnics and parties. Dog walkers: pick up and take home your dogs' poop and dispose at home. Miners: until a better solution is found, buy a box of 33 gallon garbage bags and use them; buy a 5 gallon bucket with lid, poop in it and empty it, along with used toilet paper, periodically at the Waste Disposal Facility. We call that a honeybucket, used here and in villages for years before we got sewer and water services. Remember, you're diving in those waters trusting you won't get a fecal born skin or worse infec-

City of Nome, Common Council, City Administration, City Engineer, Planning and Zoning Commission: enforce our zoning ordinances and health codes!

If we all, each and every person, family and entity do our part, take on our own responsibilities, Nome (us), our visitors and Nome's reputation as a first class city will be recognized and appreciated.

Clean Up Their Act

How do we encourage folks who do not have a stake in Nome to pick up their mess? Beach miners who visit Nome for the thrill of digging for gold leave a lot to be desired. One wonders if they were brought up to disrespect their environment. Did they have a grandma who got after them with a switch if they dumped trash in the yard? Surely they were taught to keep their homes clean. Why is it they forget what their parents taught them when they come to Nome?

It seems that our television notoriety has brought out the worst in our summer visitors. The Discovery TV crew wanted to stir things up to make it interesting so they embellished reality by calling out a fake 911 call. A false call for rescue spices the drama. Never mind that it calls Nome's volunteer firefighters, rescue and ambulance personnel away from their real jobs to play ill-conceived television games. False emergency calls are illegal and can result in serious consequences.

The trash and human waste left on the beach is a major health hazard. The residents of Nome, the City if Nome, the Sitnasuak Native Corporation and the Bering Straits Native Corporation need to come up with a plan to provide waste containers and assess beach miners and squatters for trash pick up and sanitary waste disposal. We don't have deep pockets and we don't appreciate folks who abandon all sense of civic responsibility, defile our pristine beaches and abuse our volunteer spirit. — N.L.M.—

Leave them be: Seal pups hauled out on Nome's beaches

By Diana Haecker

Marine Advisory Program Agent Gay Sheffield received two reports last week of seal pups hauled out on Nome beaches, one at Belmont Point and one at East Beach.

With the rapid melting of sea ice in the region this winter, and late formation of scant sea ice to begin with, seal pups may increasingly look for beaches as spots to rest on, in lieu of ice cakes.

"Normally they should be on ice but this year they may be using the beaches more than usual," explained Marine Advisory Program Agent Sheffield last week.

The seal that was seen at Belmont Point had left the area before Sheffield arrived. But the ringed seal that was found by a beach walker on Thursday morning was still there when Sheffield looked for it. The young seal pup sported its white puppy fur, called lanugo, and seemed alert and healthy. But the big dark puppy eyes and the general cuteness of a seal pup may cause a reaction in a well meaning human to approach a beached pup not understanding the life history of seals and and that may not be good for a seal.

"Unless you have a subsistence purpose for a seal pup, don't approach it." said Sheffield.

Sheffield said it is natural for ringed seal pups to be left by their mother after only a couple of weeks of nursing. Then, the pup has to figure out how to fend for itself and although they may look forlorn and helpless on the beach, it is best to leave them alone. Ice Seal Commissioner and Kawerak Subsistence Director Brandon Ahmasuk concurred. "Don't call the National Guard quite yet when you see a seal pup hauled out," he said. "It's the nature of the animal that when the seal is weaned that the mother goes on her way. It's no indication that it is abandoned and needs help," Ahmasuk said.

He said to give the animal wide berth. "If it appears alert, hissing at you, saying 'Hey, leave me alone,' leave it alone," Ahmasuk said.

However, if it appears to be sickly, easily approachable and shows skin sores, contact Ahmasuk or Sheffield.

"With the rapid retreat of sea ice, I wouldn't be surprised if we get several calls about seal pups on beaches," said Sheffield.

If you feel any marine wildlife is in distress, please contact UAF Marine Advisory Program (907) 434-1149 and/or Kawerak Subsistence Program (907) 443-4265

HAULED OUT — This little ringed seal, still in his puppy fur, was spotted taking a snooze on East Beach last week. Experts say there is no cause for alarm when beach goers see hauled out seals, as sea ice is scant in Norton Sound.

2014 ties with 2010 for warmest April on record

NOAA's Climate Prediction Center last week reported the globally averaged temperature across land and ocean surfaces tied with April 2010 as the highest temperatures on record for the month of April.

The global average temperature was 1.39°F higher than the 20th century average.

April 2014 tied with the same month in the year 2010 as the seventh highest departure from average among all months in the period of record, which dates back to January 1880. The record highest departure was set in February 1998 and was 1.55°F warmer than the average temperature.

That month, El Niño conditions were present for nearly a year. According to NOAA's Climate Prediction Center, the chance of El Niño emerging increases for the remainder of 2014, exceeding 65 percent during the Northern Hemisphere summer 2014.

In the Northern Hemisphere land surfaces here were 2.77°F higher than the 20th century average. The climate prediction center said that part of the warmth could be attributed to record warmth in much of central Siberia, where temperatures across a large region were at least 9°F above the 1981-2010 average for the month. Only parts of central and eastern North America were cooler than average for the month in the Northern Hemisphere.

The globally averaged ocean temperature was the third highest for April, at 0.99°F higher than the 20th century average. Continuing its recent trend, part of the eastern North Pacific Ocean was record warm. Several other regions were also record warm, including parts of the eastern equatorial Pacific off the coast of Mexico and scattered regions of the equatorial western and South Pacific, western North and South Atlantic Ocean, sections of the Norwegian and Barents seas, the central Indian Ocean and regions of the Southern Ocean south of Africa. Regions of the central North Atlantic, eastern South Pacific and a small section of the western central Pacific, and the Southern Ocean south of South America were much cooler than average for April.

Chandler concluded that most of Nome's property tax exemptions are mandatory and thus the investigation didn't yield any buildings that could be tapped for taxes in order to get more money flowing into city cof-

However, Chandler said a blanket property tax exemption for aircraft is optional. Currently, the City of Nome does not levy taxes on airplanes. Council members asked City Clerk Tom Moran to research which other Alaska municipalities exempt personal airplanes from property

The low hanging fruit appeared to be the list of sales tax exemptions. Chandler said the majority of sales tax exemptions the City grants are completely optional and not manda-

Mandatory exemptions for sales taxes are city, state and federal entities, and retail sales, rentals of good or services to non-profit religious, charitable, cemetery, hospital or educational entities. However, Council members learned that banks are exempt from sales tax in Nome, something Chandler said, was fairly unique to Nome. The city is exploring raising alcohol and tobacco taxes, a proposition that will go before the voters in the next election.

Those are all things to consider in the long run, but Councilman Stan Andersen steered the focus of discussion again to the pressing issue at hand: "Are we going to have something ready for a second reading, which has to occur in two weeks?"

Andersen said the parameters of the discussion are that the Council is not willing to raise the mill rate and does not want to dip into the city's savings account to fund the school budget. With that, only raising revenues or saving expenses are options to balance the budget.

Councilman Jerald Brown observed that the city's budget does not reflect extravagant spending. "There is not a lot of fluff in our spending," Brown said. Josie Bahnke concurred and added that the only big spending items this year are $147,000 for roofing City Hall and $100,000 to match a Nome Eskimo Community contribution of $600,000 to make improvements on East Sixth Avenue and N Street.

Still, what to do with the Nome Public Schools budget? Councilman Tom Sparks felt the NPS' pain and signaled the political will to help out. "I want to explore ways to try to assist the schools because they've been flat-lined for a while," Sparks said.

Randy Pomeranz urged the Council to act. "If we don't agree on something, then it defaults to $2.3 million that they ask for.'

At the end of the meeting, the following numbers were on the table: $1.004 million must be spent on NPS, Council members were comfortable with a $200,000 addition: up for debate is another addition of $270,000 from the contingency line

In a regular rescheduled Council meeting on Tuesday, May 27, (delayed due to Memorial Day holiday) the Council will have to decide on school budget and mill rate resolutions. In a regular meeting on June 2, the Council will then go into first reading of the City budget, with the second reading scheduled for June 9.

The project should take 3-4 weeks. Other projects include the completion of a remaining segment of Fifth Ave. between K and M streets and a section of Fifth Ave. water main between N and K streets.

cluding Indian tribes (as defined in section 4 of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450b)), to carry out the activities described in subsection (a)."

In a separate subsection, it spells out that the Secretary of Interior shall prioritize Arctic deep draft ports identified by the Army Corps, the Department of Homeland Security and the Department of Defense. Also, projects recommended by the Secretary shall be given equivalent budget consideration and priority as projects recommended solely by national economic development benefits, reads another subsection.

The Army Corps of Engineers in a cost-shared Deep Draft Arctic Port study came up with a short list that put Nome and Port Clarence on top of potential Arctic Port sites.

The study has not yet been released, but according to the project's economist Lorraine Cordova, is scheduled to be out by the end of summer.

While the Alaska delegation hailed the possibilities that public-private partnerships can bring, it is left unclear how the theory will play out in reality as private interests can potentially pump money into harbor projects and undoubtedly want something in return.

For other harbors around Alaska, the bill allows the Corps to consider subsistence use, not just economic development, when selecting projects to fund. Under the bill, small, remote and subsistence harbors in Alaska, Hawaii and the U.S. territories may receive dedicated federal funding of up to $10 million per project.

The WRRDA Bill passed 412-4 in the House and by a 91-7 vote in the Senate.

"With dollars tough to come by for federal investments in infrastructure, my Arctic Deep Draft Port amendment opens the doors to the Corps of Engineers working with non-federal public entities to find the necessary resources to move forward with a key component of our state and nation's Arctic infrastructure needs," said Sen. Lisa Murkowski. "This one small provision could open the door to incredibly meaningful progress in the region that will benefit our state."

Such a partnership could be happening in this region. Bering Straits Native Corporation has looked into the economic feasibility of developing Port Clarence. BSNC commissioned a feasibility analysis, which determined that development of Port Clarence should be economically feasible if Alaska's Outer Continental Shelf would be opened to oil and gas development.

According to BSNC Vice President Resources and External Affairs Matt Ganley, BSNC is pursuing title to Port Clarence. Congressman Don Young introduced legislation last week that would provide BSNC with approximately 2,381 acres at Port Clarence and Point Spencer.

BSNC selected Port Clarence lands in 1976 under ANCSA.

Matt Ganley said the land currently is BLM property and was withdrawn by the U.S. Coast Guard as a communications and navigation site in the 1960s. In 2010, the USCG closed the LORAN facility. "BSNC began discussions with the Congressional delegation in the summer of 2010 in an effort to expedite the transfer of the property," wrote Ganley in an email correspondence with the Nugget. BSNC contracted a geomorphologist to evaluate the longterm stability of Point Spencer, the landform commonly referred to as Port Clarence. "We have also developed some initial design and buildout scenarios for development," Ganley stated. "In conjunction with these efforts, we have been in discussions with industry regarding their needs and possible uses of Port Clarence, and have been approached by numerous private entities interested in partnering in financing development of Port Clarence."

Ganley added that it is yet too early to outline specific projects and costs involved. "Some very basic numbers have emerged in our analysis but costs associated with development are dependent on the needs of industry and government," he wrote. "There are too many variables at this time to effectively state what will be built and what the actual costs of that construction would be. It is anticipated that any development would be phased, and based on actual needs long-term economic security."

Asked what kind of facilities would be built, Ganley answered that facilities would be built to suit demand. "This may include staging for oil exploration in the Beaufort and Chukchi seas, as well as spill and maritime disaster response."

How about catering to the projected increase in maritime traffic?

"Oil and gas development in the Beaufort and Chukchi would be critical to any major undertaking at Port Clarence," Ganley answered. "While shipping is being considered, it is possible that majority of vessel routing may not be in American waters. Additionally, the state of the current long-range shipping industry is important: the vessels now shipping through the Northern Sea Route have the fuel capacity to make their trips without refueling. What services could be offered to the shipping industry by an Arctic port is yet to be determined."

IMPROVEMENTS— The Nome International Airport will see runway safety improvements this summer. The crosswind runway, pictured above, will be temporarily shortened to 4,000 feet.

Airport runway safety improvement project begins this summer

By Diana Haecker

With construction season rolling around, Nome will see several large projects begin this summer.

The State of Alaska Dept. of Transportation will implementing an FAA initiative to improve runway safety areas at commercial airports nationwide, including Nome. Contractor Quality Asphalt Paving is currently mobilizing equipment to the Nome International Airport. Motorists will see surveying crews and construction crews working on road access to the airport.

The project will improve the main and crosswind runways and to fix the deficiencies of the runway safety area, called RSA.

The RSAs are to be widened on both runways; the crosswind runway (north-south) will be shifted by 600 feet to the north in order to build a 600-feet long safety area at the south end of the runway, according to DOT spokeswoman Meadow Bailey.

The main runway (east-west) will see 1,000-ft. runway safety areas at both ends of the runway. Next year, the Snake River will be realigned around a so-called EMAS bed embankment to the west of the main runway. An RSA is typically 500 feet wide and extends 1,000 feet beyond each end of the runway but many airports were built before the current 1,000-foot RSA standard was adopted 20 years ago. In some cases, like Nome due to the Snake River, it is not practicable to build the full standard RSA so other methods are used.

The FAA employs a new technology called EMAS to safely arrest overrunning aircraft. EMAS uses crushable concrete placed at the end of a runway to stop an aircraft that overruns the runway. The tires of the aircraft sink into the lightweight concrete so the aircraft is decelerated as it rolls through the material.

Next year, the project will be finished with paving the north portion of the shifted crosswind runway to accommodate the shifted threshold and relocate navigational aids. There also will be drainage improvements done to Center Creek to the east of the crosswind runway and northeast of the main runway. Finally, the temporary construction road would be relocated and a utility line installed to accommodate the crosswind runway RSA expansion and threshold shift

The DOT expects partial closure of the crosswind runway to go into effect June 12.

The runway will then be shortened to 4,000 feet by displacing the north threshold. Full closure of the crosswind runway is scheduled for July 17 until August 15. "Additionally, we anticipate three nightly closures of the main runway during that time frame," said Bailey. "Next year's work will involve nightly closures of runway 10/28." The DOT refers to the main runway as Runway 10/28.

Bailey said the DOT does not anticipate flight impacts with the current closure schedule.

The Alaska Congressional Delegation last week announced the following grants awards:

Trout Unlimited calls on Pebble to drop lawsuit and publish its long overdue mine plan

ANCHORAGE—Trout Unlimited challenged the Pebble Limited Partnership to drop its lawsuit against the Environmental Protection Agency and encouraged the Canadian mining company to "come clean with the public, show us your mining plan and stop hiding behind hollow promises and lawyers."

PLP challenged the EPA's decision-making authority under the Clean Water Act in a lawsuit filed today in federal district court in Alaska. The company asked for the court to halt the EPA's work to analyze data and facilitate dialogue about the potential environmental impacts of the project. Research earlier this year found that Bristol Bay's salmon runs are critical to the health and livelihoods of Bristol Bay residents and fuel fishing-based economies from rural Alaska communities all the way to the Pacific Northwest.

"The lawsuit filed by the Pebble Limited Partnership won't change the fact that the Pebble Mine is still the wrong mine in the wrong place," said Trout Unlimited Alaska Program Manager Tim Bristol. "It won't change the fact that North America's largest open pit mine would destroy the world's largest wild sockeye salmon fishery that supports 14,000 jobs. And it won't change the rock-solid science on which EPA based its decision to initiate the Clean Water Act 404(c) process."

In the last nine months, two of Pebble's major investors – two of the largest mining companies in the world – decided the Pebble Mine was too risky and pulled out of the project. In doing so, one took a $500 million loss, and the other was forced to literally gift its shares to charity.

"Clearly, this is a last ditch effort from a company which now has no major mining experience on its team and has lost at every step of the way. It's ridiculous that PLP is using resources to file a lawsuit but continues to refuse to apply for official permits after promising to do so for nearly a decade," said Bristol. "The fact is, PLP can apply for a permit today, but they refuse to do so because they will have to reveal to the public once again that they will build a colossal open pit mine, impact wetlands and waterways, destroy salmon habitat and threaten thousands of jobs and unique way of

The direct impacts that Pebble Mine would have led Alaska Native tribes and Alaskans from diverse interests and backgrounds to petition the EPA to use their Clean Water Act 404(c) authority over four years

"The action being considered by EPA is not a "veto" as you so often hear from Pebble and its backers," said Bristol. "The EPA is using science and public input in order to decide if a series of additional protections should be applied to the headwaters of Bristol Bay. The overwhelming majority of Bristol Bay residents say, 'yes', and a junior Canadian exploration company, abandoned by its partners and with no mining experience is using lawyers to say 'no'. This lawsuit should be dropped and Pebble should lay its cards on the table."

Trout Unlimited is the nation's oldest and largest coldwater fisheries conservation organization dedicated to conserving, protecting and restoring North America's trout and salmon and their watersheds. Follow TU on Facebook and Twitter, and visit us online at tu.org or at savebristolbay.org.

Ski Race in Shishmaref

By Irene Ahgupuk

The exciting start to the ski race!

For the end of the year ski practice there was a race held at the Shishmaref lagoon. Students from 1st grade up to the 6th grade participated. Students who attended practice have learned about team workand a lot of the children grew up knowing to watch over or look after eachother. The ski racers followed an obstacle course that made full circle, a couple girls had seen Katie Nayokpuk was still in the race but quite a bit behind so they took upon themselves to run the race again and catch up to Katie and encourage her to finish. One student said to the others "lets catch up to Katie and tell her she can do it and she's doing a good job."

Dylon Iyatunguk, Bella Ahgupuk and Timary Stenek prepare for the ski race.

Skiers putting forth a strong effort!

Athletes lining up at the beginning of the race.

"Lets go encourage her!" So very quickly Bella Ahgupuk, Timary Stenek, Amy Eningowuk and Clare Jungers started the race again and caught up to Katie Nayokpuk and skied with her to the finish line. It was very touching to hear the girls talk about encouraging her and planning on going through the whole course again to finish with their fellow skier. It was a great experience to be there and watch as the girls caught up to her quickly and stayed with her till the end. Students showed their Northern Lights Spirit that day to show encouragement for their team mates.

The following Monday at the school assembly the top 6 skiers were awarded with a certificate and to their surprise the 4 skiers who went back around to encourage Katie to finish were joined on the floor with Katie to inform the whole school that these skiers took it upon themselves to finish again with Katie. It isn't the always the fastest who finish but also those who stick with it and finish without giving up, that day on the Shishmaref Lagoon 4 students showed their true Northern Lights Spirit and encouraged another to finish.

Spirit of Youth Award

By Paul Taylor

Donald Auliye speaking at his recognition dinner.

Donald Auliye was selected to receive the Alaska Spirit of Youth award in the category of lifesaver and prevention. Donald's name was submitted by his school counselor, after learning that Donald had rushed gasoline to a stranded boat just when the wind built up strength to push it far out into the Bering Sea, helped pull two fishermen overturned in the Bering Sea and volunteered to aide elders and others get to the school to keep them safe from the strong storm surge last Fall. Donald received an award and scholarship during a Recognition Dinner held in Anchorage April 5th, along with other inspiring teenagers throughout Alaska.

Donald Auliye with other award recipients.

Each year the Spirit of Youth Foundation recognizes 12-19 year old youths from 11 different categories: 1) business and government 2) cultural pursuits 3) faith based service 4) fine arts 5) lifesaving and prevention 6) overcoming challenges 7) the environment 8) service to community 9) service to peers 10) service to young children and 11) technology and media. Any community member may nominate spiritofyouth.org. This is the second year that a student from the Bering Strait School District has been recognized with an award.

Donald remains most humble about his actions during weather events. In his words, recorded to air on public radio, "it's just what us fishermen do for each other". Congratulations to Donald and other youth "who do so well at what they do"! Without a doubt, Donald will continue throughout his life to help others by his practical knowledge of the sea and the weather.

Alaskan Animalogies

By Lynda Bekoalok Shaktoolik

Lynda Bekoalok's 2nd & 3rd grade class in Shaktoolik wrote a book called Alaskan Animalogies. In the book the students used tissue paper to create the animals used in the analogies. Such as white is to fox as brown is to bear. Next the students wrote a paragraph comparing two Alaskan animals. The students then published the book using ibook on iphoto. The students fund raised to buy each of their parents a copy of the book. The class is very proud of their creation.

Artist in Residence

By Annette Corson Elim

Mastering different stain glass techniques.

Elim welcomed Jim Kaiser, a stain glass artist, as part of the Artist in Residence Program on April 21,2014. Jim worked with students to create stained glass projects. Projects include cutting shapes, making stars, making independent designs and masks. The students enjoyed learning how to cut glass and connect the pieces of their projects together using solder.

Artist Jim Kaiser working with stain glass.

He met with the community and staff to explain what he does and what he worked with the students on. The students and teachers displayed their work at community night, Thursday, May 1, 2014.

This residency was made possible through the generous funding from the Alaska State Council on the Arts, the Alaska State Legislature, the National Endowment for the Arts (a federal agency), the Rasmuson Foundation, and the Bering Strait School District.

Koyuk Poetry

By Pamala Potter Koyuk Prinicpal

Ms. Melinda's 5th and 6th grade students in Koyuk had an assignment to write a 3-stanza poem with a rhyming rhythm of AABB or ABAB. They were asked to think of a hero, a problem and how the hero solved the problem. These are the poems they came up with.

James

By Tara Nassuk

There was a boy named James
He liked to play games
He went to camp
When it was damp

James saw a bear It had a lot of hair He grabbed a gun And made it run

The bear was gone
He put up his tent by dawn
He went to bed
With his toy named Fred

Mike Learning How to Ride His bike.

By Kylie Hoogendorn

There was a boy named Mike.

He got a new bike

He took the bike to the playground

He kept on falling on the ground.

Mike didn't know how to ride. Even though he tried and tried He cried and cried. He decided to hide.

He was so sad
So he asked his dad
He held him on the seat.
And Mike learned to pedal with his feet.

Ice may be one of the oldest therapies known to man. Physicians in early Egypt and the Aesclepian doctors of ancient Greece recognized the anti-inflammatory and analgesic qualities of cold therapy in their writings. And while patients today have access to a plethora of over-the-counter and prescription strength remedies for common musculo-skeletal injuries. nothing has proven to be as broadly useful or universally appealing as a simple bag of ice.

Ice can be used to reduce pain and to speed recovery in a wide range of ailments. Ice is a good treatment for sprained joints, tenarthritis, headaches, and neuralgias. Cold therapy is the most commonly used first aid treatment in acute sports in-

Cold therapy improves recovery after an injury in two ways. First, ice reduces blood flow to an injured area. This slowing of blood flow, called vasoconstriction, decreases swelling and slows the migration of destructive inflammatory cells into injured tissues. A study published in 1989 showed that cold therapy used to treat serious ankle sprains reduced injury recovery time from 30 days to 13 days.

Second, cold therapy reduces muscle spasms and slows the firing of nerve endings, leading to a reduction in perceived pain.

Cold packs have become increasingly sophisticated, but there is no evidence to suggest that expensive ice packs or gel packs are better than a plastic bag filled with crushed ice. In fact, investigators have found that in order to lower the skin temperature to a therapeutic water can be rolled under the foot to soothe and stretch the tendons in a plantar fasciitis. A bath of ice water is a good treatment for injured ex-

(A topic for another discussion.)

In general, injuries should be treated with cold therapy for no more than 20 minutes, repeated as needed every one to two hours. Longer exposure to cold should be avoided since it can cause permanent nerve or tissue damage.

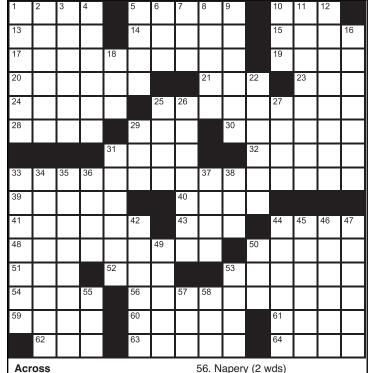

When using ice packs, a thin cloth should be placed between the ice pack and skin to prevent cold injury.

Cold therapy is not recommended for patients with Reynaud's syndrome, uncontrolled thyroid problems, poorly controlled blood pressure, or other sensitivity to cold exposure

Cold therapy should never be used on an extremity that has a loss of protective sensation like in an advanced diabetic neuropathy or nerve compression syndrome. Caution should also be used in people with peripheral vascular disease.

Talk to your provider or physical therapist about the most effective use of ice to treat your injury or ailment. It may also be a good idea to keep a bag of peas in the freezer, just in

Common Council votes to maintain school funding level

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council voted in a budget for schools that provides the same level of local funding as last year.

At the same time, the Council boosted the property tax mill rate from 11 to 12 and started to lay plans to boost sales tax during summers and on some purchases.

A standing-room-only crowd of school board members, teachers and parents expressed relief as Tom Moran distilled the number from the Council vote 4-2 as $2,042,880 from City of Nome on top of state and federal program dollars.

The law requires the Council to set the school contribution and mill rate by May 31.

The public packed the Council Chambers after a work session May 23 when the Council spoke strongly of dropping the local contribution to 33 percent of the state funding cap far lower than the 60 percent pledged by the Council May 27.

Educators spoke of packed classrooms and a lower number of educational aides under diminished funding that would downgrade learning opportunities.

'We based and planned our budget on this six-year average [60 percent] and the needs of our students. Nowhere in our planning did we anticipate the city would decide to drop that contribution to 33 percent-almost a 50 percent reduction in support in one year," Steve Gast, Nome Public Schools superintendent, told the council. "I believe this to be unreasonable and irresponsible. If the city wants the school district to tighten its belt, that's one thing—to cripple it is another. I believe this will have a devastating effect on our school and our programs.

The Council has its problems too, Councilman Matt Culley said.

We modified our budget and just played with numbers to go 'Look, we made money,' but we haven't made money," said Culley. "No offense to the school when it goes this way, but we have a way bigger budget than they do, and our fund balance is less than theirs.'

The schools will still have to dip into the district's reserve account, but property owners will have to dig deeper into their pockets to pay tax based on an increase of 11 mils to 12 mils voted in by the Council.

He wished more people had showed up at the work session during discussion of the school contribution, Councilman Stan Andersen

Councilman Randy Pomeranz voiced the same idea.

"We need to talk about these things in detail so we don't end up ... where the school's oars are taken out from under them," he said.

In preparing the City's budget, every department "took a hit," Mayor Denise Michels said.

"It's a tough year."

Michels said the City will be looking at "sin tax" on cigarettes and alcohol, as well as a summer tax hike to get tourists to help pay the costs

On the eve Nome Public Schools' financial fate would be announced by the City Common Council, Nome's school board met in a work session to speculate on potential out-

The district had asked for 2.3 million from the City, which is a $431,000 increase over last year and within sight of the 60 percent yearly average of the required contribu-

An initial meeting with council members led the board to believe they might only receive 33 percent of the City's required contributions.

School board members felt they had had a difficult time convincing the City of the gravity of the pecuniary difficulties, that perhaps members of the council considered the district budget excessive or superfluous.

When at 7 p.m. school board members migrated to Council Chambers, they were met with an outpouring of support from teachers, parents, and community members, many of whom addressed the City Council in support of school funding for the highest possible amount.

One of the last to speak was Superintendent of schools Steve Gast. 'We based and planned our budget on this six-year average and the needs of our students," Gast said.

"Nowhere in our planning did we anticipate the City would decide to drop that contribution to 33 percent-almost a 50 percent reduction in support in one year. I believe this to be unreasonable and irresponsible. If the city wants the school district to tighten its belt, that's one thing—to cripple it is another. I believe this will have a devastating effect on our school and our programs."

Gast echoed quantitatively what others has expressed qualitatively, and in the end City Council members voted to fund the school at the

Nome Gold Alaska terminates mining camp at Dredge 6

October 1. The reason: the campers trashed the place, left the ground in unsanitary condition, abused the company's hospitality by violating the terms of their agreement and misused the land, according to a company official.

The mining camp was set up in 2012 to provide space for low-income fortune seekers and their mining equipment. For $300 per season, the visiting miners were allowed to set up tents, connexes, yurts or whatever shelter they wanted and were allowed to have mining equipment on their lease. The leaseholders were not allowed to sublet or allow third parties on the lease. There are eight lease holders, but more set up camp near Dredge 6 and at the neighboring

West Beach, where driftwood and plywood shacks, blue tarp tents and flimsy shelters spring up like mushrooms each summer. There are no bathroom facilities, no running water, no Port-a-potties, no trash cans. This, Nome Gold now said, has to come to an end. By October 1, the leases terminate and the gold miners have to remove their belongings, take care of their trash and look for alternative accommodations.

After the Alaska Department of Natural Resources held an offshore gold lease sale in 2011 and the first season of Bering Sea Gold aired on the Discovery Channel, a new Gold Rush began to take hold of Nome. This caused much anxiety among city officials and service providers because of an anticipated worsening of the housing crunch, limited space at Nome's boat harbor, more stress on ambulance, fire and other services while no additional funding source came up. The City's main income from miners is derived from sales tax. However, the City does not charge miners sales tax on the gold that is being sold to the gold buyers

The mining camp was an idea of then Nome Gold land-manager Mitch Erickson to alleviate the pressure and to give miners a place to safely live and store their mining equipment over the summer.

Nome's history is rooted in mining and the prevailing sentiment is that the city has a pro-business and pro-responsible-mining Many beach and placer miners have lived in Nome for years and are honorable members of their trade. But after three seasons of rowdy crews, trashy make-shift shelters and unsanitary life styles, the grumbling among residents to put up with lower 48 residents living their "frontier dreams" got louder.

City Manager Josie Bahnke summed up the main concern: the City is stuck with the bill for services, while the state DNR has cashed in on the 2011 lease sale to the tune of nearly $9 million.

The news that the mining camp at Dredge 6 is closing adds to the anxiety now that the lower income clien-

Letters -

When I was in the legislature, I chaired the House Committee that, with a like Senate Committee, drafted the original investment strategy for the Permanent Fund.

We expected the Permanent Fund to grow until it's earning capacity exceeded oil revenues at which time we hoped voters would pass an additional constitutional amendment committing all future oil revenues to the Fund, and authorizing the legislature to draw out a fixed 6 percent per year, guaranteeing a stable economy and dividends forever.

How close were we? Last year unrestricted oil revenues totaled $6.352 billion. The Fund is nearly $50 billion. Add $9 billion from the budget reserve $59 Billion. Historic 10%, growth over five years $95 billion. ACES was socking away an extra $3 billion per year. Total in five years, $110 billion.

Six percent of $110 billion equals $6.60 billion, With the right leadership we were six years from guaranteed dividends, a perpetual balanced budget, and an economy free of booms and busts.

So close to but it won't happen unless SB 21 is repealed. Ray Metcalf

Have Fun! "Yes" to Repeal SB 21

The Oil Tax Giveaway, SB 21 needs to meet its end. The oil companies have spent upwards of $8 million on advertising to keep their golden goose alive (SB 21) and are asking folks to vote "no." What's surprising is that several Native corporations have joined together to support the oil companies in their efforts to keep SB 21 and its tax bennies for the oil companies. It gets confusing but it is no surprise because many Native corporations have oil support businesses. But wait! Will these oil support businesses go away if SB 21 passes?

So, now is the time to show the power of ordinary Alaskans and get one of the biggest grass-roots movements underway. We can show we have a backbone. We need to stand up to high pressure, deceitful advertising that would have us believe that the world will come to an end if we make big oil pay its fair share of taxes. We own the oil. It is our resource and it is not renewable. When it is gone it is gone. So, let's not give it away. Let's not be hoodwinked by the boys who want to walk away with our wealth.

Alaskans need to protect our future and hang on to our oil revenues, not give them away. Oil revenues keep the Permanent Fund healthy and give Alaska a stable economy, a balanced budget with a dividend forever. Let's not get duped. Let's vote thumbs up "yes" and repeal SB 21. It's our oil. -N.L.M.-

BSNC joins battle against oil tax repeal

By Diana Haecker

Bering Straits Native Corporation and five other Alaska Native Corporations organized a coalition that aims to fight Ballot measure 1 to repeal Senate Bill 21, a new oil tax law passed in 2013.

Under the name of "No One On One", BSNC as well as Arctic Slope Regional Corporation, Doyon Ltd, Cook Inlet Region Inc., NANA Development Corporation and Bristol Bay Native Corporation organized to help keep SB 21 as the law of the land.

The law is criticized for offering oil tax incentives to oil companies for new exploration. A bi-partisan group of Alaskans called for repeal of the controversial law and initiated the referendum process.

Officially, Ballot Measure 1 is called the "Alaska Oil Tax Cuts Veto Referendum." It will be on the August 19 primary ballot.

Jason Moore, communications director for CIRI is also the spokesman for the No One On One campaign. He explained that the name aims to communicate that "No one who knows the facts would be for repealing the law."

Moore said there has been concern about the ballot measure from Native corporations. After SB21 passed, Native corporations such as CIRI, Doyon and ARSC saw commitments from oil companies to invest in Alaska again. "There is indication that it works, the ballot measure risks to cut into this momentum," Moore said.

Asked why the Native corporations formed their own group instead of joining other anti- Ballot Measure 1 groups, Moore said that they do support other groups' efforts. "I think there was a sentiment that when we speak as one, as a coalition of Native Corporations, there comes a certain credibility with it," Moore said. "We do this because it's in the best interest of our shareholders.'

Funding for the "No One on One" campaign comes only from the six regional corporations who joined the group. In a press release, BSNC CEO and President Gail Schubert said the coalition would not accept any oil industry money to support their cause. Moore added that the coalition would be willing to accept contributions from other like-minded Alaska companies.

With August being nearly around the corner, Alaskans can expect some heavy campaigning on both sides of the issue. "You can expect some messaging through media to point out our position," said Moore. "If people knew what this reform does and the fact that the oil tax reform may result in getting more money to the state than under ACES, if we all knew about the facts, no one would support ballot measure 1," Moore stated.

More seal pups haul out on local beaches

UAF Marine Advisory Program agent Gay Sheffield received seven more seal pup sightings reports from the public. Four ringed, two spotted and one unidentified seal pup hauled out on the beach since Monday, May 26.

The seal pups were sighted on beaches at the Nome harbor, East Beach and Safety Sound. "People have done a great job of reporting what they are seeing as well as leaving the pups alone to get some rest before heading back into the ocean," says Sheffield. The rapid retreat of sea ice from N orton Sound this year is the probable cause for the seal pups to haul out on beaches. She added that the seals are not sick. "They're pups from seal species that are associated with sea ice. If there is

One pup has been found dead but the other seals seen were alive and well. Sheffield collected the dead pup and will send it to the North Slope Borough Dept. of Wildlife Management for a necropsy. #### Federal Court rules Army Corps to review CD-5 analysis

A federal judge last week ruled in favor of five Alaska Natives from Nuiqsut, finding that the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers violated the law when it approved a permit for the Colville River Delta 5 project near their community. The court held that the Corps failed to consider all of the impacts from an oil and gas project in the river delta. The project is called the Colville Delta 5 project and is being advanced by Cono-

"We depend on this area for our subsistence way of life, our traditions, and our culture. I want to be able to teach my grandchildren how to hunt and take care of the land like my elders taught me. This project threatens all of that," said Sam Kunaknana, a plaintiff in the case.

The Corps issued a permit to ConocoPhillips to build multiple bridges and a six-mile-long road extending from the CD-5 drilling pad to the existing Alpine Satellite drilling locations in the Colville River Delta, through key fishing and hunting areas of the residents of Nuiqsut.

The Corps originally denied the permit request in 2010 because the proposed project threatened the sensitive and valuable Colville River Delta, suggesting that a roadless project would have fewer environmental impacts. But in 2011, the Corps said Conoco could build a road and several bridges without revisiting concerns that led the Corps to deny the permit in the first place.

The lawsuit alleged that the Corps violated the National Environmental Policy Act because it failed to consider new information and changes to the CD-5 project. The lawsuit also alleged that the Corps violated the Clean Water Act because the agency failed to adequately explain the reversal of its decision. The Court agreed with the Nuiqsut plaintiffs that the Corps violated NEPA because the Corps did not adequately explain why it did not prepare a supplemental NEPA analysis. The Court has not yet ruled on whether the Corps complied with the CWA.

The plaintiffs are represented by Trustees for Alaska. Trustees for Alaska's Executive Director applauded the decision. "This is a victory for the Arctic and all of those who rely on its abundant subsistence resources. It's clear that the Corps' decision rested on shaky facts and projects like this one require public input, especially when there are direct impacts to a community's way of life," said Victoria Clark, the Executive Director. "The Corps now has the opportunity to go back and fully consider all the impacts, including subsistence impacts, from this project."

U.S.FWS leads United States' plan for Polar Bear Conservation

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is leading a group of stakeholders to craft a conservation plan for polar bear. When finalized, the plan will guide activities for polar bear conservation in response to the 2008 determination that the polar bear is a threatened species due to the ongoing loss of sea ice habitat from global climate change. "We are working with our partners here in Alaska, throughout the U.S., and internationally to address all threats to polar bears," said U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service Regional Director Geoffrey Haskett. "The team we have convened to develop the United States' conservation management plan includes a diverse array of perspectives about polar bears, but the one thing everyone can agree on is that polar bears should be conserved, the question is 'how?"" The plan will meet legal obligations under the Endangered Species and Marine Mammal Protection acts, and will contribute to a global plan being drafted by the parties to the 1973 Agreement on the Conservation of Polar Bear -United States, Canada, Russia, Norway, and Greenland/Denmark-the five polar bear range states. The Polar Bear Recovery Team—as the group is known-includes 35 representatives from federal agencies, the State of Alaska, the North Slope Borough, Alaska Native organizations, industry, non-profit organizations and the Canadian Wildlife Service. Those groups have expertise in polar bear biology, climate science, policy, communications and traditional and contemporary indigenous ecological knowledge.

The team's goal is to have the draft plan available for a 60-day public comment period in late fall 2014 and a final plan for presentation to the international partners at their 2015 meeting. "The Service received over 700 thousand public comments during the listing process, so we know the public has a great interest in the fate of polar bears," Haskett said. "The public will have a similar opportunity to weigh in on how we continue to conserve and manage polar bears into the future as outlined in the plan." A public announcement will be issued when the comment period opens on the draft polar bear conservation management plan.

See the Polar Bear Recovery Team and progress on the draft plan at www.fws.gov/alaska/pbrt.

Southern waves to blame for Arctic sea ice breaking

Scientists in New Zealand have made a discovery related to the forces that cause changes in sea ice. According to the New Zealand National Institute of Water and Atmospheric Research, the biggest waves in the Southern Ocean are breaking up the Arctic sea ice. According to their data, the Southern Ocean's massive waves or those over nine feet can break sea ice even in greater distances than previously thought. NIWA researchers believe the same process may help explain why the Antarctic sea ice is increasing, while the Arctic sea ice is decreasing. The findings of the study were published in the scientific journal Nature.

yearly average, committing $2,042,880. The news comes at great relief to the district, but it doesn't solve all their problems. Even with an increase in the base student allotment and additional contributions of almost $400,000 per year for three years, the district is again expecting to draw on dwindling savings to create a budget that will offer the desired services to Nome stu-

In other school board news, NPS business manager Paula Coffman brought for the board's consideration a proposed change in food service management for the district.

After ample research and bid queries, Coffman shaped a budget that would turn over the district's food service program to NANA Services, LLC. The impetus for the change comes from a desire to save money and to offer "a true breakfast to students," Coffman explained to the board. "The breakfast program we have now is costing us about $30,000, and lunches are $6.53 each for the current fiscal year. That amount will go up next year.'

NANA bid $6.60 for lunches. According to Coffman, some of the benefits of turning over management include lower prices for better products as well as the corporation's integral management of ordering and personnel.

The district would still receive existing reimbursements for the food program, including credits for the Alaska Grown Foods Grant and the USDA Commodities.

Initial concerns came from board member Barb Nickels, who was leery of the potential for the company to bring in employees who aren't from Nome. Coffman explained that the district would still be the point of service and keep current workers, but that they wouldn't be responsible for training staff in the kitchen. "It's hard for us to keep someone in place who can keep up with those rules," Coffman said.

Other districts in the state report cost savings in having NANA run their programs, in addition to other benefits of having a professionally managed food service. Nome-Beltz Vice Principal Doug Bushey added, "In Kotzebue they did hire local individuals. And I think the pool here would be just as good. And they were NANA employees, so they had to go through NANA for employee relations." In light of pending budget information, board members agreed to revisit the proposed change at their meeting on June 3, after they learn more about the city's funding

STATE BUILDING - Demolition work started on the State Building last month. All State agencies offices which are usually housed in the building have been moved to other locations.

Renovations begin at State Building

By Diana Haecker

In order to make the renovation of the State Building on Front Street more efficient, all State agencies have been moved out, said Dept. of Administration State Leasing and Facilities Manager Tanci Mintz.

The renovation project is going to take approximately one year to complete and will involve all disciplines of the construction industry, Mintz

All exterior and most interior walls, mechanical, electrical, plumbing and data and telecommunications elements will be removed. The roof, the steel structure and portions of the building's core areas are the only parts of the building to remain. Demolition marks the first major phase.

Then the new exterior envelope will be installed to get the building

After that the electrical, mechanical, plumbing portions of the project will be tackled. Interior upgrades include new walls, painting, flooring, and window treatments.

The last phase will be the installation of the State's new systems furniture, agency equipment and fixtures.

The renovation was awarded to Denali General Contractors based in Anchorage.

The bid amount was $7,640,000. State agencies usually housed in the state building were relocated to the following sites: Department of Fish and Game - moved to Our Savior Lutheran Church at 507 Bering Street; Department of Health & Social Services, Office of Children Services moved to the BSNC Building at 110 Front Street, Suite 200. Department of Law moved to the Federal Post Office Building at 113 Front Street. The Department of Corrections moved to BSNC Building at 110 Front Street, Suite 114 and 116. The Legislative Information Office moved to the Sitnasuak Building at 214 Front Street.

Mintz added that the general contractor will have a team of sub-contractors representing the various disciplines of construction activities, including Q Trucking, CEI, Polyseal Insulation, Commercial Contractors Inc., Tilmo Painting, Valley Floors, JR Heritage, Anchorage Restaurant Supply, Mantech Mechanical, Northern Lights Mechanical and Smokey Point Electric.

FIRST BARGE TO NOME—Operations at the causeway were in full swing as soon as the Aleutian Trader barge arrived, on June 1. Containers with goods and materials were offloaded, while stacks of backhaul connexes waited to be loaded for the return trip.

The Dock Walk

By Diana Haecker

Activity at the Nome Port and Small Boat Harbor is starting up early this year. Harbormaster Lucas Stotts reports the first ship to dock on the causeway this year was the Norseman for a crew change. They took on Bureau of Ocean and Energy management scientists for a walrus survey. The Norseman arrived in the morning of Thursday, May 29 and left that night.

The first barge to arrive in Nome was the Northland Services barge Aleutian Trader and its tug Polar Ranger. They had to jog on the Nome roadstead until seas calmed for a landing at the causeway on Sunday.

Nome says farewell to the Little Sisters of Jesus

By Nancy McGuire

The parish of St. Joseph and the community of Nome (with Little Diomede listening on KNOM Radio) gathered for a Thanksgiving

Mass for the Little Sisters of Jesus. The Little Sisters have served the communities of Little Diomede, King Island and Nome for 62 years. The St Joseph parish hall was packed last Tuesday evening as folks of many denominations from near and far gathered for the farewell occasion and to share fond memories.

Archbishop Roger Schwietz,

O.M.I. gave an introduction and the liturgy and music were selected by the Little Sisters, with Fr. Ross Tozzi and Rev. Mr. Robert Froehle presiding, and David Doddman and the members of the choir.

At the close of Mass each of the Little Sisters - Sr. Alice, Sr. Laura Lee, Sr. Nirmala. Sr. Odette, Sr. Damiene, Sr. Monique, Sr. Nobu and Sr. Yoshie were presented with a lighted candle by the children of St. Joseph parish. Special plaques were presented, "With deep appreciation for the presence and ministry of the Little Sisters of Jesus who served Nome from 1952-2014 and who will be forever in our hearts." One plaque will be placed inside the St. Joseph church and the other will go with the Little Sisters to Anchorage. Brian Blandford carved the open heart and cross logo of the Little Sisters; it is attached to the front of the altar at St.

At the conclusion of the liturgy folks joined the Little Sisters for a desert social with some of the best special treats from the kitchens of Nome. A video was produced by Ray Penetac showing the lives of the Little Sisters on Diomede and with the King Island community and Nome. Folks hugged and chatted with the Little Sisters and told them how much they will be missed.

The Little Sisters are joining their order in Anchorage because they are growing older and find it more difficult to get around. Sister Alice explained the mission of the Little Sisters, "Our community does not do the ordinary things people are used to having Catholic sisters do," Sister Alice continued. "We don't teach catechism, we don't run hospitals. What we do is what Jesus did when he was walking the roads of Israel and Palestine. He was dealing with people individually—people who were sick, people who needed help. And that is how we accomplish our mission. We work with people on an individual level. But we choose very carefully the places we go to."

One of those places was western Alaska. The first Little Sisters—three young French women who didn't speak much English—came to Nome in 1952, to reach out to King Islanders, and, eventually, the people of Diomede.

"Our work on Little Diomede, King Island and around Nome stretched from years to decades." We spent summers hunting at Woolly Lagoon with King Islanders, preparing sealskins on Diomede, and spending years admiring the birds that migrate through western Alaska every year.

But now, the time has come for the Little Sisters to leave.

"The whole culture has changed a lot, and we, Little Sisters, are getting older."

The Little Sisters have not yet left town but in mid-July, Sister Alice and Sister Damiene will leave for Anchorage, while Sister Nirmala will spend some time at the Little Sister's motherhouse in Rome. While the Sisters may be leaving their homes-and their communities-of the past few decades behind, Sister Alice said she values what she will take away from her time in western Alaska. "I learned so much from the King Islanders, about how to respect the environment," she said. "That's the thing I'll be taking away with me, this deep respect.'

The Nugget will have a special feature on the Little Sisters in the near future.

New broadband service coming to Nome

By Sandra L. Medearis

Alaska company Quintillion Networks has joined forces with Arctic Fibre, based in Canada, to reap benefits from a 9,424-mile subsea cable project that provides fiber-optic network connections across oceans linking large populations and local villages.

This summer Arctic Fibre will continue to lay plans and conduct marine surveys for a fiber optic network backbone to connect London to Tokyo by going through the Northwest Passage. Nome will have a connection to the system in 2016.

Fiber-optic communication allows one to transmit data from one place to another by using pulses of light through optical fiber. Typical information is digital information generated by computers, telephone systems and cable television companies.

All told, spurs will connect Nunavut, Canada, and Alaska into 14 communities, 13 of which do not currently have broadband. On the way past Alaska's northern shores, spurs will come off the Arctic Fibre cable to Prudhoe Bay, Barrow, Wainwright, Point Hope, Kotzebue and Nome for new broadband connectivity due the end of 2016. Local providers will purchase the new broadband capability to distribute to local users. Quintillion is a middle mile-open access provider only, a wholesaler to the Alaska market through an agreement with Arctic Fibre.

Both companies are privately owned and privately funded, according to Quintillion's CEO, Elizabeth Pierce. This means the building timeline does not depend on federal and local grant funding schedules. However, ice in Canadian waters delayed start-up scheduled for 2015. A Canadian icebreaker is now available to the project, according to Pierce.

This summer, Arctic Fibre has contracted seafloor surveys using sonar to chart a course to reduce operational risk to the cable. The cable itself will cast off no risk to wildlife or humans, according to Pierce—no microwaves, no light, no radiation, and no electrical risk. If the cable sustains damage, "the data just stops," Pierce said. Material stockpiles for the landings will also start to appear in the connecting communities and manufacture of the cable will begin.

In 2015, horizontal directional drilling and construction of manholes will run conduit to the ocean. Crews will place undersea cable. Additional public informational meetings will happen to keep the public in touch with the project.

Nome's spur should come ashore near the Mini Convention Center and be operable in 2016.

What you will have in Nome, will be envied in Anchorage," according to Elizabeth Pierce, Quintillion CEO. Pierce came to Nome hold a com-

Ungulates profit from low snow winter

By Diana Haecker

In its 2013-2014 winter report the Alaska Center for Climate Assessment called last winter a memorable one, not just because of the recordsetting high temperatures but also for its significant impacts over many regions across the state.

Many Nomeites will remember January 27, 2014 when temperatures rose to 51°F in the region and trails showed brown tundra instead of hard-packed snow. According to the Alaska Climate Center, Nome's average temperature last winter deviated 16.1°F above what is considered normal.

Accordingly, snow depth was nowhere near where it should be in 'normal" winters. Nome's National Weather Service meteorologist Robert Murders points out that NWS measures snow depth by having a sensor measure how much snow fell, converting it to liquid and then converting the liquid amount into snow depth. For example, one inch of snow equals one tenth of liquid water. This winter's number, measured from July 1 to the present day, measured 72.3 inches of snow depth. In theory.

What really happened was the snow melted away under warm temperatures, got rained on and nearly disappeared. "We were only 3.1 inches lower than the normal of 75.4 inches," said Murders. But then the big melt set in. Between January 21 and 23, there were 22 inches of snow on the ground. On January 24, depth went down to 19 inches. After January 27, the day of sunshine and 51°F, snow depth was down to 13 inches. But January 31, there were only five inches of snow depth left. In reality, the tundra was brown with a few specks of white.

The low depth of snow and the mottled brown and white landscape made it hard for Alaska Fish and Game wildlife biologist Tony Gorn to count musk oxen as he attempted to fly a musk oxen population survey. "The winter was easy on animals such as moose and musk ox, but difficult on biologists," Gorn said.

Gorn had to give up counting musk oxen because of the poor visibility not due to blizzards but because the animals that usually stand out against a white canvas of snow were now blending into the landscape. The last survey was flown in 2012 when the musk oxen population estimate for the Seward Peninsula was 1,992. Compared to the last survey flown in 2010, this marked a 12 percent annual decline. Although Nome is inundated with musk oxen that seem to seek out town for grazing and bringing their newborns, the picture is different out in the country.

Gorn said recruitment rates are down. This happens when fewer calves make it past ten months of age and become "recruited" into the herd. As for the causes, Gorn doesn't think it's a habitat or food constraint. "There is food, but what is very significant is predation by brown bears, that is a real concern," Gorn said.

New hunting regulations for brown bears will go into effect in July. The Board of Game changed the bag limit of one brown bear every four regulatory years to one bear every regulatory year for Game Unit 22C. Regulations for the remainder of game unit 22 are not changed.

However, he said, aside from predators, musk oxen and moose did probably benefit from the low snow

ADF&G also flew moose population surveys. For unit 22E, preliminary numbers show the moose population increased 3 percent to 701 animals. Unit 22D population numbers have seemed stable since 1993. Current data is still being analyzed.

ADF&G biologist Jim Dau reported from Kotzebue that this winter was not particularly hard on the Western Arctic Caribou Herd. Alaska's largest caribou herd saw a significant decline down from 325,000 animals estimated in the 2011 census to 235,000 animals as of July 2013, but Dau said this winter did not seem to have contributed to a high mortality rate. "I was worried about the November ice storms," Dau said. But after flying five to six flights this winter he noticed that icy crusts were only prevalent in a few places. Looking at the feeding craters, Dau found that access to food was not an issue this winter.

While the ungulates had it easy. other critters didn't. ADF&G biologist Peter Bente observed the icing, thawing and the barely existing snow cover made survival hard on voles, lemmings, mice and other burrowing animals, which usually benefit from an insulating layer of snow. "Small mammals probably suffered from hypothermia," Bente said. "They may have gotten wet, cold and eventually run out of energy to stay warm.'

This had an effect on those which prey on the little mammals. Bente noticed that short-eared owls and northern harriers arrived early. "The nice warm temperatures in April promoted early movement of birds," Bente said. "But now they've moved on and they are hard to find."

Bente speculates that they didn't find much food and left. "I take that as some evidence of winter icing conditions." Willow ptarmigan also may have had a hard winter. Bente explained that willow ptarmigans plunge into snow banks to take advantage of the snow insulation. Without snow or a hard snow crust, the birds need to increase their metabolism, which can lead to running out of energy and dying from a form of winter starvation.

Bente said that as late as December there were eiders taking advantage of the open seawater on East Beach. During the Christmas bird count a red-breasted merganser was spotted at the unfrozen mouth of the Nome River.

Your morning cup may reduce the risk of acquiring Methicillin-resistant Stapholococcus aureus (MRSA).

According to research published in the Annals of Family Medicine drinking an occasional hot tea or coffee reduces the risk of carrying Consumption of one cup of hot tea or coffee per month reduced a person's risk of carrying MRSA by more than 50 percent. The risk fell by up to 67 percent if both coffee and tea were consumed.

Consumption of other caffeinated drinks such as iced tea or soft drinks (pop) showed no effect in the study.

Methicillin-resistant Stapholococcus aureus (MRSA) is a contagious bacterium that causes frequent boil-like skin infections and occasionally more serious infections of the bloodstream, urine, or lungs.

MRSA is frequently carried in the front part of the nose. People who carry the MRSA bacteria in their nose are more likely to develop a future skin infection or pass the bacteria to others. Many times doctors will prescribe a topical antibiotic to apply in the inner nose of any person being treated for a MRSA skin infection to prevent a recurrence of the infection after treatment.

Unlike other bacteria that infect the skin, MRSA is resistant to almost all oral antibiotics and many I.V. antibiotics as well. At one time.

it was thought to be a problem only in hospitals, but over the last ten years, MRSA has become increasingly prevalent in communities of rural Alaska. It is estimated that as many as 13 percent of people in some rural communicarry ties the MRSA bacteria on their skin without any sign of infection. Research shows that specific compounds in coffee exert an antibiotic effect on multiple harmful bacteria such as E. coli, salmonella, and S. aureus. Additionally, tannic acid and catechins in tea have an added antibiotic effect on these bacteria as well as cholera.

The research does not suggest that tea or coffee will replace the current standard of DOCTOR care. Typically, treatment of MRSA infections requires very specific antibiotics as well as surgical drainage of infected wounds for proper healing.

Rather, as the authors point out,

"Our findings of reduced odds of MRSA nasal carriage among tea and coffee drinkers raise the possibility of a promising new alternative to aneasily accessible.'

'Alaska's Territorial Court Records reveal part of the fabric of our state's history, and should not be ripped out of the state whose opening chapters they tell. I thank the Archivist of the United States for taking the time to listen to Alaska's requests and realize that these records, which document Alaskan lives and state functions, should not be relocated 1,500 miles from those who rely on them to research family history, land claims, and other important facets of Alaska's history.

NARA wrote to Murkowski and shared their decision that most of the Alaska Territorial Court Records will be transferred over to the State Archives. NARA is preparing the legal documents to formalize the transfer of these Territorial Court Records, along with the Alaska Railroad Corporation records that NARA is contractually obligated to turn over to the state.

tele is being pushed on the saturated housing market again.

"Our main concerns are congestion and traffic at the harbor." Bahnke said. "Second, we would like some assistance and oversight from DNR to help manage this mining boom that they are responsible for." Bahnke said the City doesn't have the resources to have and maintain a campground. She hopes to come to an agreement with DNR to pitch in and somehow alleviate the burden the City currently carries on

The only help the City gets is a seasonal DNR mining administrator. Former Nome Police Department Sgt. Byron Redburn worked in 2012 and 2013 in that position. This year, Redburn won't return to Nome. Instead, DNR hired Nick Kimmel, according to Jack Kerin with the Division of Mining, Land and Water at the DNR Fairbanks office.

Another major contributor to put Nome on the map for fortune seekers is the Bering Sea Gold reality show. After having filmed for several seasons, people are still inspired to try their luck dredging for gold in Nome. The filming itself also caused friction. City officials are in talks with Original Productions, because the show aired a Nome Police officer's consent. Chief Papasodora remembers that the incident took place last year. An officer responded to a call from the port and while trying to solve a dispute between two miners, which turned out to be a civil matter, the police officer was filmed from various angles.

NPD aims for increased patrols Hard data is not available that links the rise in crime to the seasonal influx of gold miners.

But in summary, there were several dramatic events that cast a shadow over the new Gold Rush. There were deaths - John Bunce wound, a miner suffered a heart attack while diving. There were incidents of near-drowning, several search and rescue missions by Nome Volunteer Fire and Ambulance departments and there were several fires ongold dredges parked in the port. Police Chief John Papasodora reported shootings when gold dredge crewmembers tried to keep other dredges from encroaching on "their"

Less dramatic events involve police having to deal with disputes among miners when partnerships go sour, police catching folks hauling trash out of the Monofill at Center Creek Road and police keeping an eye on suspicious activity when miners tried to remove property unauthorized from Nome Joint Utilities complexes.

Port personnel have to keep an eye on the uplands and remind miners they can't live in connexes parked on City property in the port uplands

Chief Papasodora said the strategy to deal with the situation is to structure NPD's operations to be highly visible and to patrol town, even the beaches, on ATVs. With six patrol officers, two sergeants, one chief and two community service officers, plus K-9 "Icon" and his handler Justin Timm, the police department is about to be fully staffed.

But still, Chief Papasodora minds the public to keep doors locked, to secure property, to keep ears and eyes open and to not leave keys in vehicles. "Remember if something doesn't look right, it probably isn't," he said.

On June 11, DNR will host the annual miners meeting to go over reg-

According to DNR's Jack Kerin, the main change is that the regular Alaska Placer Mining Application now includes a cover letter that gives more detailed information from the applicants.

The meeting takes place on Wednesday, June 11 at 3 to 5 p.m. at Old St. Joe's Hall.

reminds the community no one except ADF&G and the Alaska State Troopers are authorized to take orphaned wildlife into possession. Here are steps to take when coming upon orphaned wildlife during spring travel.

Do Not

- •Do Not touch, handle, or pick up any animal or bird.
- Do Not approach muskox groups. Newborn muskox calves are easily trampled and killed when groups run.
- Do Not approach cow moose and new calves. Cow moose can be aggressive and dangerous.

Do

- •Report the location, type, and behavior of animal that appears orphaned to wildlife officials.
- Avoid approaching or touching animals or birds that appear orphaned. It is illegal and may result in a fine up to $10,000 & one year in jail.

Federal, state fishery managers focus on Chinook crisis

By Laurie McNicholas

Chinook (king) salmon stocks are at all-time lows in the Arctic-Yukon-Kuskokwim area that includes Nor-Sound, the Yukon River, Kuskokwim Bay and the Kuskok-

A decade-long decline in the area's Chinook stocks has accelerated in recent years.

The dire condition of Chinook salmon stocks in western Alaska waters are priority concerns for both the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game, which manages salmon fisheries in state waters, and for federal fishery managers charged with minimizing the bycatch of Chinook salmon and chum salmon in the Bering Sea pollock fishery to the extent practicable.

Salmon are prohibited species in the directed pollock fishery, but they are incidentally taken as bycatch in trawl nets by vessels targeting pol-

In 2013, Chinook returns to the Unalakleet River in Norton Sound and the Yukon River fell below minimum spawning escapement goals set by the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game to sustain Chinook runs.

A high proportion of Chinook salmon bycatch in the pollock fishery is of Yukon River origin. The Kuskokwim River Chinook returns met 2013 escapement goals, but the run was so poor that little remained for a subsistence harvest.

In response to similarly poor A-Y-

K Chinook run projections for 2014, ADF&G has severely restricted subsistence fishing and banned sport fishing for Chinook in the area.

On June 9, the department closed all marine and fresh waters to subsistence salmon fishing in Norton Sound subdistricts 5 and 6 (Shaktoolik and Unalakleet).

Sport fishing for Chinook is closed in all waters from Rocky Point to Point Romanoff until Aug. 16. No commercial fishery for Chinook in the subdistricts has been conducted for years.

The department states in a June 6 press release that it will conserve Chinook salmon for escapement needs and refocus harvest pressure on more numerous chum and pink salmon.

Measures to conserve Chinook salmon can involve restricted opportunities to harvest chum salmon.

Gold Grabber applies for permit to mine gold at Grantley Harbor

By Diana Haecker

A mining outfit called Gold Grabber LLC has submitted a mining permit application to mine for gold inside Grantley Harbor. The proposal is causing alarm to Teller subsistence hunters and fishermen.

Through their traditional councils they have made statements that gold mining in the subsistence areas is not welcome.

A variety of fish followed by marine mammals pass through Grantley Harbor, which separates the ocean and Port Clarence from freshwater at Imuruk Basin and its streams and rivers.

One of those rivers leads to one of only two red salmon spawning lakes on the Seward Peninsula.

The communities of Brevig Mission, Mary's Igloo and Teller use the area for subsistence fishing and hunting. "We don't welcome mining in our subsistence fishing and hunting areas," said Mary's Igloo Traditional Council President Lucy Oquilluk.

Teller Traditional Council President Wesley Okbaok also issued a statement that strongly opposes the mining proposal.

"These areas are highly important to fish and mining would have a detrimental effect on our subsistence resources," Okbaok said.

According to Oquilluk, neither the mining company nor the Dept. of Natural Resources, the state's permitting agency, has consulted with the Traditional Councils of Teller or Mary's Igloo.

The Gold Grabber

The Gold Grabber is a mechanical gold dredge - an excavator mounted on a barge-like platform. The steel barge measures 82 feet in length and 28 feet in width. Unlike suction dredges, a Hitachi E-200 excavator reaches about 12 feet down into the submerged ground, excavates the material and hauls it on board where it is dumped onto a vibrating screen plant and processed in a 30-ft sluice box. Also on board are a 100-kw generator, an eight-inch water pump and a 900-gallon fuel tank with diesel.

According to the DNR application, the miners propose to use 15 gallons of water for personal use a day, with a 100-gallon water tank on board. The application states the City of Nome as a water source. In the mining plan, owner Richard Schimschat states the operation would be using 500 to 800 gallons of saltwater to wash the material at gold separation.

The Nome Common Council has given the contract for general contractor and construction manager for the Richard Foster Building to ASRC SKW Eskimos.

The panel awarded the bid for $12,117,961 based on the bid team's scoring of technical merit and guaranteed maximum price for the work.

The Richard Foster Building would contain the Carrie M McLain Museum, the Kegoayah Kozga Library and Kawerak, Inc.'s Beringia Center for displays and education.

With no dollars on the horizon, the Kawerak wing has yet to be funded.

Contract documents laid out the general contractor's work in two phases: preconstruction and construction phases. The construction phase will not get the go-ahead until completion of a final design and submission of a lump sum price from the general contractor/construction manager.

The resolution passed by the Council authorizes City Manager Josie Bahnke to issue the notice of award subject to receiving all paperwork from ASRC SKW Eskimos.

Until then, the contractor will perform preconstruction work under a limited notice to proceed from Bahnke.

The construction phase would begin following Council approval, according to the resolution.

Getting to the final design may have hit a rocky road, however, because of a shortfall in funding for the Kawerak Inc. wing of the building.

At the first of the year, the Council had on the table an all-inclusive construction budget of $14,066,807 and an overall budget of &19,614,807—meaning a funding gap of $3.6 million.

The funding plan for Kawerak's section of the building depended on a $1.9 million grant from state Dept. of CED's Statewide Libraries Grant Program and $1.3 million from the Rasmuson Foundation.

The DCED declined the request for the $1.9 million in library money. Now bad news has come from Rasmuson Foundation: no money,

Melanie Bahnke, Kawerak's president, was set to meet with City ad-

EIS to begin for Ambler Mining District Industrial Access Road

By Diana Haecker

In a May board of directors meeting, the Alaska Industrial Development and Export Authority board has approved going forward with plans to develop a road leading to the Ambler Mining district. The AIDEA submitted the necessary federal permit applications to begin the National Environmental Policy Act Environmental Impact Statement process for the proposed industrial road to the Ambler Mining district.

The road, as envisioned in the latest plans, would lead from milepost 135 of the Dalton Highway west, crossing Doyon land, NANA land, the Gates of the Arctic National Preserve along the southern Brooks Range to the upper Kobuk River. The motivation to build a 200-mile road is to facilitate mine developments at several copper, zinc, lead and silver deposits along the way.

NovaCopper Inc., a spin-off from NovaGold Resources Inc., stands to the public they will be here.

pizza. —N.L.M.-

profit from the road development as it owns the rights to a copper claim known as the Arctic deposit and has interests in the NANA-owned Bornite project. Although the road is to be constructed not with public money, but through public-private partnerships, the costs so far have been covered with public Alaska state funds. Since 2010 when the DOT began reconnaissance studies, the state has put $17.75 million toward the Ambler Road, For FY15, an additional $8.5 million were appropriated to the project by the State egislature.

Since the DOT handed over the Ambler Mining District Industrial Access Road – AMDIAR for short - to AIDEA, more wetlands, cultural resources, subsistence, fisheries, hydrology and caribou studies were done, according to AIDEA Infrastructure Development Officer John Springsteen.

In the past few weeks, AIDEA hosted several meetings in Kobuk, Fairbanks and Anchorage but did not widely advertise them. Until last week, information on the project was not posted on AIDEA's website, but on its contractor's DOWL HKM webpage.

Springsteen told the Nome Nugget that the meetings were meant to hear from immediate stakeholders and that with the NEPA process, strict meeting announcement requirements and government-to-government consultation protocols will have to be adhered to. However, he said, the lead agency to steer the EIS process will be a federal agency - most likely the Army Corps of Engineers rather than AIDEA.

In its latest form, the project has been narrowed down to a one-lane road proposal, which later on could be improved to a two-lane road, a recently published fact sheet reads. Given that the road is billed an industrial road - no public traffic allowed - and that it would accommodate heavy equipment traffic, a one-lane proposal gives pause to think. However, AIDEA Business Development Officer Mike Catsi explained that the 52-mile Red Dog mine road to its port terminal at the Chukchi Sea is also considered a one-lane road and that's what was used as a model for AMDIAR.

The cost estimate for the entire 200-mile road, Springsteen said, is pegged at $200 to 400 million. Mike Catsi said that the EIS will begin to be financed through the state's capital appropriation, but the price tag attached to the entire EIS is yet unknown. "We work to make sure that all questions are being addressed," Catsi said. In terms of a timeline, Springsteen added that an EIS finding could take between three and eight years to be finalized.

In one meeting an attorney with the law firm Trustees for Alaska brought up an ethical sticky point: AIDEA had contracted with DOWL HKM, a company that also performed hydrology studies on Nova-Copper's Arctic deposit in 2012. DOWL was then owned by NANA through 2012. DOWL would not be able to work for a federal agency in the NEPA process, because they would be conflicted because they're working for AIDEA, explained Springsteen.

Asked where the public can find out about future AMDIAR meetings, Springsteen said that once the EIS process starts, there likely will be a designated website and it will be a federal responsibility to post meeting schedules. For now, however, this is not the case and control over meeting participation seems to be the prerogative of AIDEA.

In the meantime, Shungnak Tradi-

U.S. Senators call on governors to expand Medicaid

Begich: Expanding Medicaid is good for Alaska businesses, economy

U.S. Senator Mark Begich last week joined a group of senators urging 18 state governors to put aside their political differences and expand Medicaid in their states in order to bring access to life-saving health care and preventive health services to millions of Americans.

"In Alaska, Governor Parnell's refusal to expand Medicaid means denying health insurance to thousands of hardworking Alaskan families," said Begich. "Aside from the obvious health benefits to Alaskans, the state Chamber of Commerce urged the governor to expand the program because it is also the right thing to do for Alaska businesses and the economy. Without the expansion, people who cannot afford insurance will continue to get their health care needs met in hospital emergency rooms across the state—the most expensive way to get health care. Those costs will continue to be passed on and Alaskans' hard-earned tax dollars will continue to be shipped to the Lower 48 instead of staying right here in Alaska."

Under the Affordable Care Act, the federal government provides funding to states that wish to expand their Medicaid programs. This funding is then used to pay local hospitals, doctors and other health care providers to administer care. By refusing this federal funding and choosing not to cover millions of eligible individuals, these 18 states stand to lose billions in new revenue with the increased use of health care systems.

The Alaska Chamber of Commerce, the Anchorage Chamber of Commerce, the Alaska Hospital and Nursing Home Association, the American Association of Retired People, the Alaska Federation of Natives, Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium, and other Alaska business and civic groups have all urged Parnell to expand Medicaid.

The letter was signed by U.S. Senators Chris Murphy (D-Conn.), Tim Johnson (D-S.D.), Jay Rockefeller (D-W.Va.), Mary Landrieu (D-La.), Brian Schatz (D-Hawaii), Sheldon Whitehouse (D-R.I.), Barbara Boxer (D-Calif.), Kay Hagan (D-N.C.), Claire McCaskill (D-Mo.), Ben Cardin (D-Md.), Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.), Richard Blumenthal (D-Conn.), Tammy Baldwin (D-Wis.), Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.), Kirsten Gillibrand (D-N.Y.), Patty Murray (D-Wash.), Debbie Stabenow (D-Mich.), Martin Heinrich (D-N.M.), and Tom Harkin (D-Iowa).

Oil sheen detected in Shishmaref

The Alaska Dept. of Environmental Conservation was notified of an oil sheen on the sea ice at Shishmaref. According to the DEC, the Village Public Safety Officer saw the sheen on the nearshore pack ice and smelled the odor of gasoline. DEC's State on-scene Coordinator Tom DeRuyter told the Nome Nugget on Monday that the source of the oil has not been identified yet. The Coast Guard, the oil spill response organization Emerald and the DEC sent personnel to Shishmaref to contain and investigate the spill. DeRuyter said it appeared to be a weathered oil product, covering an area of 40 ft by 300 ft. Responders put boom and absorbent material around the spill, but rotting sea ice made it difficult to do DeRuyter said they couldn't point to the source of the spill. "There is no indication where the oil came from," DeRuyter said.

The Coast Guard and DEC will go to Shishmaref weekly to monitor the situation. They hired a local responder to keep the boom in place and apply more absorbent pads.

DeRuyter said there were no reports to his knowledge of oiled marine mammals or birds.

Coast Guard offers dockside safety checks in Nome

Coast Guard Sector Anchorage prevention personnel are scheduled to visit Nome, Wednesday through Friday, to promote maritime safety and environmental protection during the 2014 gold dredging season. The Coast Guard will offer voluntary dockside safety checks to reduce an operator's chances of incurring penalties if boarded by the Coast Guard during mining operations. Interested operators will be able to sign up through the Harbormaster's Office. "The Coast Guard is committed to ensuring boaters in Alaska are prepared during the gold dredging season," said Lt. Cmdr. Dan Buchsbaum, Inspections Division chief at Coast Guard Sector Anchorage.

"Vessel operators should be aware of the safety requirements for gold dredge vessel operations in coastal waters and dockside safety checks will assist in our goal to keep boaters

Beth Kerttula appointed to Federal Ocean Council Di-

Former State Representative and Alaska Arctic Policy Commissioner Beth Kerttula last week was tapped to be the new Director of the National Ocean Council in Washington D.C. One of the Council's main missions is to help develop and implement the National Ocean Policy Implementation Plan. "Beth Kerttula is the wise choice for this appointment. She has a comprehensive understanding of the legal issues surrounding America's coastline," said AAPC Co-Chair Representative Bob Herron. "As the state with the longest shoreline, the policies of the National Ocean Council may have an immeasurable impact on Alaska. It's good to know that Alaskans will have someone working on coastal policy in DC who truly understands what Alaska is all about.'

The news of Kertulla's appointment came through the White House Office of Science and Technology Policy.

"We're thrilled an Alaskan of Beth's caliber is at the forefront of national ocean policy," Rep. Chris Tuck, Kerttula's successor as Minority Leader, said. "Beth is a tremendously talented leader. She'll do a great job moving the nation forward on critical issues affecting our oceans and coastlines.'

Kerttula left the Alaska Legislature earlier this year to accept a fellowship in ocean policy at Stanford University's Center for Ocean Solutions. Aside from serving as a legislator from Juneau for 15 years and as leader of the House Democrats for seven of those years, Kerttula sat on the Alaska Arctic Policy Commission, a body dedicated to addressing issues brought on by increasing development and other attention to the world's arctic regions.

liaq, pronounced "see-KOO-leeis owned by the National Science Foundation and operated by the University of Alaska Fairbanks.

Documents signed last week mark the hand-off of Sikuliaq from the shipbuilder to UAF.

A thorough testing of all the ship's systems in ocean and ice conditions will take place during the coming year as a follow up to the ship construction, but last week's delivery is a significant milestone as it signals a shift in focus from construction to operations.

During the next month, UAF will outfit the 261-foot ship and train the crew. Over the summer, the vessel will transit from the Great Lakes to the Pacific Ocean via the Panama Canal. In preparation for science operations, additional equipment will be installed and a series of testing exercises will be completed while Sikuliaq is en route.

The first research cruises are scheduled to begin in October in the Pacific Ocean. Sikuliaq is expected to arrive in Alaska waters in February. A commissioning ceremony in the ship's homeport of Seward is scheduled for March 2015.

Sikuliaq is the first vessel in the U.S. academic research fleet capable of breaking through sea ice up to 2.5 feet thick, making it uniquely capable of conducting polar and subpolar research.

The ship will allow researchers to collect sediment samples directly from the seafloor, host remotely operated vehicles and use a suite of winches to raise and lower science equipment throughout the water col-

The vessel is equipped with an array of sonar systems for mapping not only the ocean floor but also biomasses and ocean currents within the water column.

NSF announced funding for the vessel five years ago as the first major project funded from NSF's portion of the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act.

The total cost for the project is $200 million.

The ship was designed by The Glosten Associates, marine architects located in Seattle, and built by Marinette Marine Corp. Marinette, Wisconsin.

NO FEAR— Muskoxen frequenting Nome have lost fear of people, like this bull browsing close to Icy View.

Muskox

recounted the joy Bernard brought when he joined the family and became the leader of the Samuelsons' sled dog team. "After we got him, that guy used to bark outside the window at 6:30 every night. He was living the training schedule Jeff set out for him. He was teaching us," she

"He told us 6:30 was time to go on the evening run," Gary said. "He was an exceptional leader for us. He was a humble fun guy to have around."

'We feel by this murder by the muskox that he took it for the team. He was a hero. None of the other four dogs was hurt. They didn't get touched," Laura said.

The tears came.

Laura and Gary stood up and summon a visitor to their window looking on the back yard of their riverside home on Nome's Port Road. Their dogs relax in the quiet evening, only a few feet away from the Samuelson's house near the river.

Suddenly the dogs begin to sing, heads to the sky with mouths made round to howl a sendoff to the evening jet heading to Anchorage. "They are all singing soprano," the visitor quips.

"Bernard had the deeper voice," Gary Samuelson said.

Now that voice is silent. Laura points to a circle of fresh earth with an empty dog chain coming from the center. That's where Bernard's house used to be.

Sunday over a week ago, the Samuelsons went to bed around 11 p.m. after they watched a herdabout 18— of the short-legged, stocky, hairy muskox that hang out by their place, go up and over a small hill to the west. That herd has a couple of large old bulls guarding its harem. Gary Samuelson, on occasion, had to fire up his red Jeep to chase them away from the house.

Bernard had been developing hind end issues affecting his legs.

"He was slow that night. He was 13 years old. If something came after him, it would take him a bit to get inside his house," Gary Samuelson said.

"We are perplexed. We did not hear a ruckus," he said. "We hear everything. We have Jafet inside the house. If he hears something, he will jump on the bed and wake us upmoose, muskox, and loose dogs running by.

"This time, nothing. Jafet remained asleep. We remained asleep. We think it happened about 3:30, 4 o'clock in the morning. We're stunned that we heard nothing, no barking," Gary Samuelson said.

The Samuelsons woke early Monday, June 2, and looking through their window to the dogs, saw blood in the yard—a lot of blood.

Gary went out to investigate and returned sickened. Bernard was in his house, gutted and dead. Parts of his body lay on the ground between Bernard's house and the Samuelsons' house.

"It was a horrific scene. It was terrible. I've never experienced in my family history a situation—a tragedy like this. I was not prepared for this. It was so heart wrenching," Gary said.

"Bernard was gutted like a moose," Laura said.

"We have a warning for people who think that muskox aren't going to attack their dog. The fact is, if you have a single dog out on a chain by your house, like in Icyview or east end [where muskox are thick] or whatever, you're vulnerable. That muskox will walk over there, a halfmile, or a block, and it will tear up your dog," Gary Samuelson declared. "If you thing it 's not going to happen to you, it will happen to you. Sooner or later, it will happen to

Muskox have harassed, knocked about doghouses, killed or seriously injured dogs in at least a dozen families over the past few years. One owner came out and found his dog's body pulverized. This year, the problem continues and seems to be getting worse with a greater number of more aggressive muskox lounging and grazing within Nome's city limits. Muskox fear and hate dogs because they resemble wolves, their natural enemies.

Both cows and bulls have horns, but the bulls' horns are heavier and stronger, according to biologists.

Mature bulls are about 5 feet high at the shoulder and weigh 600-800 pounds. Cows are smaller, averaging approximately 4 feet in height and weighing 400-500 pounds.

The horns are lethal and very efficient—only one dip of the horn into the gut and the dog is disemboweled," Gary Samuelson said.

Some residents feel the town is under siege from muskox that are causing them to change their summer lifestyles.

"Everywhere I go, I never know where they are. I know they are everywhere in town," Mercie McGuffy said. "They are like a real danger affecting my life. It's scary."

McGuffy has been working out on her bicycle to prepare for an athletic event in July.

Saturday a week ago, she set out to ride to the Nome River Bridge.

When I was coming to the Beam Road turnoff, I saw two muskox. I thought to myself I could ride real fast by them. When I got up to them, there were about 30. There I am, worried out of my mind. It was fearsome. I turned around and got out of there.'

When McGuffy tried another route, the "loop route" past the high school, they were out there too," she

"What's most concerning to me is little kids are not aware of the danger when wild animals are coming right up to our doors," she said.

Indeed, there have been numerous reports of brown bears following moose and muskox into town. Biologists say the muskox are coming to town to shield their young from predators; that is to say, bears are driving the confrontation between residents, their dogs and muskoxen.

Two years ago the state Dept. of Fish and Game increased the numbers of muskox that could be taken, but for the sake of public safety, limited the weapon used to bow and arrow in the Nome city limits.

Some people say that the bag limit should be increased to reduce the numbers. Game biologists say there has already been a drop in the muskox population.

Gary Samuelson feels that the muskoxen over the years have become too comfortable in town, that they should be made to feel less comfortable, that town cannot be a haven for avoiding predation.

That idea is finding popularity among those who fear for family and

They would like to see muskox harvested and the meat distributed to elders, especially from muskox harvested under the "defense of life and property" principle.

ministration at the end of this week to discuss the "What now?" for funding the lease space and common areas Kawerak desires for the Beringia Center.

Earlier in the year, the Council also decided to include the core and shell for the three parts-museum, library and Beringia center, in the base bid and treat the Kawerak buildout as an additive alternate. If Kawerak did not obtain funding, that space could provide storage for library and museum operations and be available for program expansion, according to thinking shared by councilmembers and members of the Nome Museum and Library Commission at a joint meeting.

To expedite construction and get started this season, the Council decided to break the construction package into five bid packages. The bids are in for all five packages. The total project budget stands at $19,150,700 for a full program building including Kawerak's lease space.

A memorandum from Randy Romenesko and Kendall Gee of DOWL HKM and Brian Meissner of architects ECI/Hyer provided to Bahnke states that savings and reductions have allowed the budget to drop to $19.2 million, as requested by the Council.

The memorandum details the following adjustments to the budget:

• Deferring costs associated with Kawerak's tenant improvements.

 Reducing the project contingency from $1.3 million to $600,000 since the City's risk has been lowered, because site work has been bid and is under contract; a highly competitive general contractor selection has selected ASRC SKW Eskimos who provided a guaranteed maximum price for construction; and SKW's guaranteed maximum price includes $218,000 in construction contingency.

To eke out a building to house all three functions, planners also decided to drop exhibits and shelving for the time being.

The Council, in passing the resolution to hire SKW has issued a Notice to Proceed on preconstruction activities during which time the Council can beat the brush for ways to save money on design and construction.

Because the project design is at 65 percent completion, with advance purchases of construction purchases on the way, it is not good thinking to erase Kawerak's 3,300 sq. ft. from the blueprints, say project managers.

They hope that on the way to 100 percent design they can figure a solution to having a museum, library and Beringia Center despite a $3 million plus deficiency in funds.

The department will reopen marine waters in the Shaktoolik and Unalakleet subdistricts for chum salmon directed fishing for one 24-hour period June 16 for gillnets with a mesh size of 6 inches or less and will announce subsequent weekly openings on Mondays. For freshwater areas, the department will announce one 36-hour beach seine subsistence opening per week beginning June 23. Any Chinook salmon incidentally captured in beach seines while targeting other salmon must be immediately returned to the water alive.

Feds focus on Chinook

The A-Y-K Chinook salmon stock crisis took center stage last week at the North Pacific Fishery Management Council meeting in Nome. In 2009 the council approved a Chinook salmon management plan for the pollock fishery that was implemented in 2011 as Amendment 91 to the Bering Sea Aleutian Islands fishery management plan. Development of Amendment 91 was triggered by a pollock fishery bycatch of about 120,000 Chinook salmon in 2007.

At that time, Chinook taken in pollock trawl nets were returned dead to the sea. Amendment 91 requires that all salmon taken as by-catch in the pollock fishery be retained.

Amendment 91 makes a 60,000 Chinook salmon Prohibited Species Catch (PSC) available to the American Fisheries Act sectors whose members voluntarily participate in an incentive plan agreement (IPA) approved by the National Marine Fisheries Service and that meet a Chinook salmon bycatch performance standard with a 47,591 Chinook PSC limit.

The PSC limit is allocated seasonally—70 percent in the pollock fishery A season that starts in January and 30 percent to the B season that begins in June. The seasonal PSC limits are allocated among four AFA sectors—the trawl catcher/processor sector, the mothership sector, the inshore sector and the Community Development Quota Program based on percentages specified in regulation. Allocations to the inshore sector are in turn allocated among the inshore cooperatives and the inshore open access fishery. Allocations to the CDQ Program are allocated among the six CDQ entities. Chinook salmon PSC allocated to the sectors, inshore cooperative or CDQ groups is transferable under circumstances specified in regulation.

An IPA is a voluntary private contractual agreement among vessel owners, CDQ groups or both to avoid Chinook salmon bycatch at all levels of Chinook abundance and salmon encounter rates. The 47,591 PSC limit applies to any sector that exceeds its Chinook salmon bycatch performance standard. The performance standard requires that if any sector fishing under the 60,000 Chinook PSC limit exceeds its share of 47,591 Chinook in three of seven consecutive years, that sector will be allocated a portion of the 47,591 limit in all future years. A Salmon Savings Incentive Program rewards vessels with credits for avoiding Chinook bycatch.

Last week, the council reviewed a staff discussion paper that (1) evaluates the regulatory changes needed to incorporate Bering Sea chum salmon bycatch management into the Chinook Salmon IPAs and (2) evaluates possible measures to refine the current Chinook salmon bycatch management program either by regulatory measures or by incorporating more provisions in the IPAs. The council also received feedback on mechanisms for modifying Chinook bycatch management within IPAs in a paper and in oral reports from IPA representatives. They were asked to provide input on inclusion of the following five items within the IPAs in contrast to making these changes by regulatory means.

1. Requiring modification of IPAs to include restrictions or penalties targeted at vessels that consistently have the highest Chinook salmon PSC rates relative to other vessels fishing at the same time.

- 2. Requiring use of salmon excluder devices at times of year in which Chinook salmon encounter rates are relatively high.
- 3. Requiring a lower base rate beginning September
- ginning September.
  4. Provisions to shorten the pollock season to end when pollock catch rates significantly decline and Chinook salmon PSC rates increase in October.

5. Closing the fishery to a sector (or cooperative) if the sector's (or cooperative's) weekly Chinook salmon PSC rate exceeds a specified rate in September and/or October.

The staff discussion paper cited evidence of positive behavioral changes by the pollock fleet in response to Amendment 91.

"Bycatch rates (Chinook salmon per ton of pollock) have declined overall in all sectors since the 2004-2007 historically high period," the paper notes. The paper also notes that bycatch rates in October 2011 were the second highest by month after 2007. A table in the report shows Chinook salmon bycatch by sector from 2011-2013 and vessels

TESTIMONY - Louie Green Jr. delivered testimony to the North Pacific Fishery Management Council.

Chinook crisis

"Operationally, the decision on when to begin fishing in the summer season appears to drive a vessel's relative rank," the paper states. "Vessels which begin fishing earlier, finished earlier in the summer and had the lowest relative rank for Chinook bycatch. In contrast, those who were still fishing into October had higher rates and correspondingly consistently ranked worse. Some behavioral changes have been observed in the relative timing of fishing in these vessels since program inception and an improvement in their relative ranking.

Council receives testimony

Individuals from salmon dependent communities in the A-Y-K region and organizations that represent them submitted written and oral testimony to the council. They asked for significant reductions in the 60,000 Chinook bycatch limit and 47,591 PSC performance standard in light of historically low levels of salmon abundance throughout the

They expressed fear that a spike in bycatch could devastate their severely diminished Chinook runs. Noting that Chinook subsistence fisheries are closed throughout the A-Y-K region for the first time in history, they said it is unjust for them to bear the entire burden of Chinook salmon conservation while pollock fishermen are allowed such a high Chinook bycatch limit.

Some of those who testified recalled fish camp experiences rich with cultural, social and economic benefits when vibrant Chinook runs throughout the A-Y-K region supported abundant commercial and subsistence harvests, in contrast to the economic hardship, poor nutrition, and loss of cultural traditions and family and community unity they suffer in the absence of Chinook.

The Association of Village Council Presidents, Bering Sea Fishermen's Assn., Kawerak, Inc., Tanana Chiefs Conference and Yukon River Drainage Fisheries Assn., which collectively represent 118 communities in the A-Y-K region, submitted a letter asking the council to (1) reduce the overall Chinook bycatch hard cap from 60,000 to 20,000 fish and the performance standard cap without incentive programs from 47,591 to 14,500 fish, and (2) adopt regulatory provisions to shorten the pollock season end date when Chinook salmon bycatch rates increase while pollock catch rates decline in late September and October.

In regard to the Yukon River Chinook run, the letter notes: "The escapement goal for Canadian origin stocks (which make up approximately 50 percent of the run) mandated by the Yukon River Salmon Agreement and agreed upon by the Yukon River Panel, have only been met in two of the last eight years (the goal was met in 2009 and 2011). The 2013 escapement of 30,275 was well below the goal (42,500-55,000 Chinook salmon) and the lowest on record."

"The Association of Village Council Presidents and the Tanana Chiefs Conference with tremendous leadership have come together, and we have river-wide agreement on a moratorium on Chinook salmon fishing this year," said Becca Robbins Gisclair, executive director of the Yukon River Drainage Fisheries Assn. "We're not pointing fingers at the pollock fishery-nobody's pointing fingers at who caused the declines. But I think the job for all of us is what we can do to help salmon rebuild. At this point all that we can control is the harvest, and in 2014 effectively 100 percent of the harvests of Yukon and Kuskokwim Chinook salmon is allocated to the pollock fishery. And I would present that as well as being a conservation issue, that's also patently unfair."

Gisclair told the council she appreciates the pollock industry's efforts to achieve Chinook bycatch reduction. "I feel we'd be in a much worse situation if they weren't putting all the effort into it that they are," she added. She also said neither the staff analysis of ideas the council put forth to further reduce salmon bycatch nor the industry feedback on the suggestions provide a sense that many of the ideas will achieve the hoped-for bycatch reductions.

"To be quite frank, I think the proposals that have come forth at this meeting are a band-aid for a gaping head wound, and I think that we need to go a lot further than what's been put on the table," she said. "We're at a point where just tweaking what we have is not enough, and we don't have the time to wait for more proposals." Every salmon counts, she added.

Gisclair asked the council to move forward with a problem statement and an analysis with a range of alternatives presented in the minority report of the council's Advisory Panel, including an abundance-based cap on Chinook bycatch, if that's possible. "I think linking a cap to in-river abundance would be the best option," she said. "If it's not (possible), I also suggest looking at simply lowering the performance standard and the overall cap to address the current state in-river.'

Testimony presented to the council by pollock industry representatives generally favored an industry proposal submitted to the council in October 2013 to incorporate chum bycatch management into Amendment 91 IPAs to provide a higher level of bycatch reduction for chum salmon of Alaskan origin and the flexibility to continue to avoid Chinook when Chinook bycatch encounters increase after Sept. 1.

Council adopts motion

The council unanimously approved a motion by Commissioner Cora Campbell, Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game. The motion as approved by the council has a couple of amendments not included in the following original motion.

The council initiates an analysis of Chinook and chum salmon bycatch management measures in the Bering Sea pollock fishery with the following purpose and needs statement and alternatives.

Purpose and needs statement: The current chum salmon bycatch reduction program under Amendment 84 does not meet the council's objectives to prioritize Chinook salmon bycatch avoidance while preventing high chum salmon bycatch and focusing on avoidance of Alaska chum salmon stocks and allow flexibility to harvest pollock in times and places that best support these goals.

Incorporating chum salmon avoidance through the Incentive Plan Agreements should more effectively meet those objectives by allowing for the establishment of chum measures through a program that is sufficiently flexible to adapt to changing conditions quickly.

Chinook salmon are an extremely important resource to Alaskans who depend on local fisheries for their sustenance and livelihood. Multiple years of historically low Chinook salmon abundance have resulted in significant restrictions for subsistence users in western Alaska and failure to achieve conservation ob-

The current Chinook bycatch reduction program under Amendment 91 was designed to minimize bycatch to the extent practicable in all years under all conditions of salmon abundance and pollock abundance. While Chinook salmon bycatch impact rates have been low under the program, there is evidence that improvements could be made to ensure the program is reducing Chinook salmon bycatch at low levels of salmon abundance. This could include measures to avoid salmon late in the year and to strengthen incentives across both seasons, either through revision to the IPAs or regulations.

Alternatives

Alternative 1: No action. Alternative 2: Remove BSAI

Amendment 84 regulations and incorporate chum salmon avoidance into the Amendment 91 Incentive Plan Agreements. Revise the regulations to include associated reporting requirements for chum salmon. Revise regulations to include chum salmon bycatch avoidance as fol-

Description of the incentive plan. The IPA must contain a written description of the following.

The incentives that will be implemented under the IPA for the operator of each vessel participating in the IPA to avoid Chinook salmon and chum salmon bycatch under any condition of pollock and Chinook salmon abundance in all years.

The incentives to avoid chum salmon should not increase Chinook salmon bycatch.

The rewards for avoiding Chinook salmon, penalties for failure to avoid Chinook salmon at the vessel level or both.

How the incentive measures in the IPA are expected to promote reductions in a vessel's Chinook salmon and chum salmon bycatch rates relative to what would have occurred in absence of the incentive program.

How the incentive measures in the IPA promote Chinook salmon savings and chum salmon savings in any condition of pollock abundance or Chinook salmon abundance in a manner that is expected to influence operational decisions by vessel operators and avoid Chinook salmon and chum salmon.

How the IPA ensures that the operator of each vessel governed by the IPA will manage that vessel's Chinook salmon bycatch to keep total bycatch below the performance standard described in paragraph F6 of this section for the sector in which that vessel participates.

How the IPA ensures that the operator of each vessel governed by the IPA will manage that vessel's chum salmon bycatch to avoid areas and times where the chum salmon are likely to return to western Alaska.

NPFMC tackles chum bycatch plan

By Laurie McNicholas

Following is a summary of lengthy efforts by the North Pacific Fishery Management Council to develop a chum salmon bycatch management plan for the Bering Sea pollock fishery. The summary is derived from a staff discussion paper on Bering Sea Chinook and chum salmon bycatch management as presented to the council during its meeting last week in Nome.

Chum salmon bycatch in the pollock fishery peaked at about 700,000 fish in 2005. A majority of chum taken as bycatch in the fishery originate in hatcheries in Asia and Russia. Work on a plan to reduce chum bycatch began after the council approved a Chinook bycatch management plan for the pollock fishery (Amendment 91), which was implemented in 2011.

The council reviewed three different drafts of environmental assessments of chum bycatch management measures in 2011 and 2012. However, each alternative was estimated to slow down the pollock fishery in the B season, which tended to increase Chinook salmon bycatch. While chum salmon bycatch tends to be taken in higher amounts in late July to early August, Chinook bycatch rises in September and October when chum bycatch is lower. So efforts to reduce chum bycatch earlier in the summer that increase fishing pressure later in the B season can increase Chinook salmon bycatch.

Chum bycatch in the pollock fishery currently is managed under Amendment 84 with a voluntary

Inter-cooperative Agreement (ICA) among fleet participants and a rolling hot spot (RHS) program in which the fleet adheres to shortterm closures in discrete areas of the Bering Sea when observed bycatch is high. The original ICA prior to Amendment 91 included provisions to stop chum closures regardless of the bycatch base rate when Chinook encounters were high, allowing for maximum flexibility to avoid Chinook late in the B season. When the Amendment 84 regulations were revised under Amendment 91, all references to Chinook in the regulations were removed including this flexibility.

In December 2012 the council asked each sector of the pollock fishery to provide a proposal detailing how it would incorporate a western Alaska chum salmon avoidance program with vessel level accountability in their existing Chinook IPA for council review. In October 2013 the council received a combined industry proposal for incorporating chum into the IPAs along with a staff discussion paper.

The industry's objectives are to provide a higher level of bycatch reduction for chum of Alaskan origin and the flexibility to continue to avoid Chinook when Chinook bycatch encounters increase after Sep-

The council's latest efforts to develop effective methods to manage chum salmon bycatch in the pollock fishery are described in the accompanying story, "State and federal fishery managers focus on Chinook salmon crisis.'

School Board agrees to explore new food service

By Kristine McRae

At their regular meeting last Tuesday evening the Nome School Board continued discussions about a proposed program that would offer the district's students a full breakfast and lunch service. Business Manager Paula Coffman assured board members that the district would see little, if any, change to current costs if they were to contract the food service management to NANA Management Services. The NMS is jointly owned by NANA Development Corporation and the international contract service company Sudexo. Bruce Turner with NMS attended the meeting to talk about implementation of the program and to answer questions about the services, which are offered in several districts around the state. Turner explained that his company is able to purchase fresher foods more cost effectively. "We can offer more fresh fruits and vegetables," Tanner said, "and we include heritage meals [like] caribou stew and Russian meals. The other piece we bring is the breakfast program, which allows us to utilize staff efficiently all day." Turner added that he has seen enrollment increase in schools that offer breakfast, and that teachers report the students are more alert and ready to learn.

Currently the district spends almost $30,000 for the cold, snack-breakfast at the elementary school, and it's not offered consistently. The Nome-Beltz Jr./Sr. High School doesn't offer a breakfast program. The proposal is for a full menu at both schools, and the district would still receive the grants and commodities benefits it currently gets as reimbursement from state and federal programs.

Existing and new employees in the kitchen would technically work for NANA, under the guidelines for the proposal, and a manager would frequent the schools to help with training and ordering. Board members peppered Tanner and Coffman with questions specific to the costbenefit analysis surrounding the figures, which are essentially $5.57 for a lunch and $4.60 for breakfast. Coffman used the following scenario to clarify the cost and the grant savings in one month: "Say we serve 1,000 meals a month. That's $6,600 for lunches, but during that month we used $1,000 of our grants. That money comes off of our invoice before we are charged."

Board member Barb Nickels voiced several concerns surrounding the proposal including the increased cost to kids who don't qualify for the free or reduced lunch subsidy, having outside staff running the kitchens, implementing a new and possibly costly program at a time when the district is having to make cuts, and the number of children whose families would take advantage of the breakfast service.

Currently 75 percent of Nome students are eligible for free lunch, 9 percent qualify for reduced, and 19 percent pay full price. Board president Betsy Brennan shared that she had a discussion with a teacher in which she asked what he thought about a breakfast program. "His eyes lit up," Brennan said, "He thought it would improve attendance and make the kids more ready to learn." There are studies that show benefits of eating breakfast for students include improved grades, increased concentration, and weight maintenance.

A full breakfast program at the elementary school would demand a bit of rescheduling to give the children time to eat before class starts, but Superintendent Gast was confident that they could make small adjustments in daily routines that would allow for food without compromising actually "seat time."

In the end the board voted, 3 to 1, to approve the exploration of an agreement between Nome Public Schools and NANA management services. An actual contract will be reviewed and voted upon before the changes will take effect, but the plan is to have the new program ready to go when school starts.

In other school news, Mrs. Bushey reported that overall attendance at the elementary school was between 80 and 90 percent all year, and that the majority of tardies, while still a problem, were less than five minutes. Gast told the board that the Capital Improvements Project to the HVC system at the high school is moving forward, and that the Anvil City Science Academy remodel is also moving forward as scheduled.

After last week's announcement that the district will again receive funding from the City that is on par with the last several years, board members breathed easier about upcoming staffing issues. Although they still foresee having to dip into the fund balance (savings), positions like the pre-k teachers and kindergarten aides appear to be safe.

Photo by Diana Haecker CONSTRUCTION UPDATE— Quality Asphalt and Paving project Superintendent Duke Dilley marks the runway safety area which is to be improved this summer with a red marker. QAP and the State DOT will hold weekly updates on the project throughout the summer on Friday

WORK MEETING— DOT's Tony Cox, QAP superintendent Duke Dilley, QAP project manager Max Vockner, QAP project engineer Matt Schram and DOT's Vanessa Musich began a series of public meetings last Friday, at the Council Chambers, to update the public on the airport's runway safety improvement projects. The runway safety area project began a few weeks ago with the building of a construction access road off Center Creek road.

Airport runway improvements underway

By Diana Haecker

The State of Alaska Dept. of Transportation and Quality Asphalt Paving, the contractor for the Runway Safety Area improvements to the Nome International Airport, updated the public last Friday on the status of the two-year project.

The DOT and QAP will conduct those update meetings every Friday at 3 p.m. in the Council chambers at City Hall.

The project will bring the two runways at the Nome airport in compliance with FAA runway safety regulations.

This year, work will be done on the crosswind runway, running north-south.

The north end of the runway is referred to as threshold 21. That's where work is slated to begin this week with temporary shortening of the runway by 1,500 feet to 4,000 feet. In case of a severe crosswind, jets won't be able to use the runway.

However, Airport Manager Bob Madden said he does not expect any more delays than the usual bad weather issues. Madden said last year's lessons – when a runway closure coincided with a six-day spell of bad weather and fog – were well learned. There will be limited closure times and plenty of notification to runway users and the public, Madden said.

When the safety improvements are done, QAP project superintendent Duke Dilley explained, the paved runways will still have the same length, but with longer and wider RSAs. Past the paved runways on the crosswind and main runway thresholds 3, 21 and 28, there will be an additional area of gravel, so that planes still can recover without dropping into the tundra. At runway threshold 10, the west end of the main runway, the Snake River will be slightly rerouted. QAP will install a so-called EMAS, an engineered materials arrestor system to slow planes in case of overshooting the runway. This is scheduled for next year.

QAP began pouring gravel to create a construction access road from Center Creek Road to Nome Gold land. The contractor asked the public to not go there to walk their dogs because it will be a very busy place this summer with heavy equipment traffic. "It's an active construction area," said QAP project Max Vockner.

It will also be necessary to reroute the northern part of Center Creek.

Heavy equipment arrived on the first barge to excavate a new channel for the creek and to later excavate tundra to extend the RSA. The flow of the creek will continue under Center Creek Road in the same location, as well as at the access road leading to the National Guard Hangar. The Nome Planning Commission decided to take a close look at traffic at the intersection of Fourth Avenue and East H Street in response to a request from citizen Kat Lee for stop

"A lot of people are speeding through that long stretch," Greg Smith, building inspector observed during the NPC meeting June 3.

Slow down on putting up stop signs, Commissioner Charlie Weiss advised.

"Let's go look rather than grab an intersection and say we need stop signs," he said, adding that he would like to talk to the Nome Police Dept. and the City's Public Works depart-

The Commission voted unanimously to table the question pending more research.

The good people who would stop for a stop sign are the ones who are not speeding, Commissioner Ken Hughes offered.

Commissioner John Odden suggested that if people were speeding in the area, that Nome Police Dept. enforce the speed limit.

In other business the Commission voted unanimously to approve a preliminary plat for Sons Subdivision,

The NPC has fine-tooth combed the application for some time with the help of John Blees, the City's acting city engineer and Greg Smith, building inspector. The process has involved looking at lot sizes, boundary markers, percolation testing for septic system viability, conformation to zoning laws and making labels on Blees and the City's staff recommendations favored approval. Now the City and Ivanoff can move ahead toward a final subdivision plat.

By Kirsten Bey

Last Sunday, 17 people participated in the annual Stroke-n-Croak Triathlon. The air temperature was a chilly 40°F with the wind bringing the temperature down to 35°F. It wasn't raining so no one complained about the weather. In addition to the regular spectators, a musk ox watched as the runners and bikers passed Icy View. Fortunately, the musk ox was more interested in grazing than participating in the

NSEDC honors former board member with christening of tender vessel Paul C. Johnson

By Laureli Kinneen NSEDC Communications Director

The Paul C. Johnson will be making its maiden voyage to its homeport of Unalakleet next week following a christening ceremony that was held in Seattle on Monday, June 2. The 66 ft. tender vessel, built by Kvichak Marine Industries, Inc. and owned by Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation, will be used to purchase and tender herring, crab and salmon from resident fishers in the Norton Sound.

The vessel is designed for shallow-water operations, which will aid navigation through the mouth of the Unalakleet River to the community's seafood processing plant. With 70,000 pounds of salmon and a full load of chilled water to keep the fish fresh, the vessel drafts at an incredible 4.5 feet.

The Paul C. Johnson is named after a former Norton Sound fisherman and NSEDC board member from Unalakleet. In 1992, during NSEDC's restructuring to qualify as an eligible CDQ Program entity, Paul Johnson served as president and board member. From there, Paul served an additional two terms as an NSEDC board member, and as a Siu Alaska Corporation board member from April 2009 until the time of his passing.

On a sunny day at the Fishermen's Terminal in Seattle, Paul's sister, Tia Wilson, christened the vessel as friends and family cheered on. "On behalf of the Johnson family, we thank NSEDC for honoring our brother with this beautiful vessel," Wilson said. "Paul never worked for praise. He worked for the region, his community and family, and we look forward to seeing this boat working in Unalakleet and the Norton Sound very soon."

"Paul was a humble, yet successful fisherman," said NSEDC Board Chairman Dan Harrelson. "He was a good man, and NSEDC is honored to operate a vessel in his name, ported in his hometown of Unalakleet. It's a beautiful boat, and we are proud of the work Kvichak did in constructing the Paul C. Johnson—a boat that will represent and serve as a reminder of Paul's dedication and support of the Norton Sound region."

The Paul C. Johnson accommodates a crew of four, is powered by two 450 HP Cummins engines turning 42-inch 4-blade propellers, and has a speed of 10 knots loaded and 12 knots empty.

Do Not

- •Do Not touch, handle, or pick up any animal or bird.
- •Do Not approach muskox groups. Newborn muskox calves are easily trampled and killed when groups run.
- Do Not approach cow moose and new calves. Cow moose can be aggressive and dangerous.

Do

- •Report the location, type, and behavior of animal that appears orphaned to wildlife officials.
- •Avoid approaching or touching animals or birds that appear orphaned. It is illegal and may result in a fine up to $10,000 & one year in jail.

Gun rules to live by

Sergeant Charlie Cross

When you get ready for summertime activities, make time to consider some real life safety issues about guns and ammunition.

There are many countries in the world that don't allow its citizens to possess firearms. Having the right to bear arms does not always come with common sense built in, how-

Just because you've seen your dad, uncle, grandpa or brother handle a gun a certain way doesn't makethat the correct way. Gun safety is as serious as it gets, the consequences are enormous if you get it wrong.

Have you heard of a child being killed or seriously injured because they were playing with a gun? Believe it or not, a child will do whatever a parent allows him or her to do. Imagine the feeling of the gun owner when they hear "BOOM!!" coming from the back bedroom or inside the tent. After patting yourself on the chest and legs to make sure you're not perforated, you might dash toward the sound of the noise to see if someone else is injured or worse. Why would the gun betray you like that? You thought it was unloaded!

Allow the following safety rules to help provide you with a lifetime free from gun related tragedies.

Gun rules to live by every single day:

1. All guns are always loaded. Now, the concept is simple: Treat every gun as though it is loaded. Handle it as though it has a round in the chamber. A gun is not a toy.

2. Never let the muzzle cover anything you are not willing to destroy. This rule has some terminology that isn't always used in day to day life: muzzle and cover. The muzzle is just the front of the gun, the business end, the part where the bullet comes out of. Cover means to point or where the muzzle is pointing. Take your pointer finger and point it at your right knee, you just covered your knee with your finger. The rule is self-explanatory, but let me make an example: Are you OK with the muzzle of a shotgun or rifle or pistol covering your knee or your child's chest? I'm not.

tional Council interim President Michael Tickett said that the council together with the Native Village of Shungnak, the City and the Elder's Council passed a joint resolution to support the EIS process.

Other communities in the Doyon region opposed the road in resolutions passed last year.

Jill Yordy, Clean Water and Mining Program Director with the Northern Alaska Environmental Center based in Fairbanks, said AM-DIAR is one of the biggest projects on her radar. "We are concerned with clean water and mining issues and in this case, we want to make sure that public stakeholders are being heard," she told the Nugget. Yordy does not feel that information is readily forthcoming. She said baseline studies have not much advanced since the DOT handed over the project and presentations are held revealing no details but mostly generalities including the lure of jobs.

Local opinion is torn between the need for jobs - promises of construction jobs, maintenance jobs and mining jobs – there is also an need to preserve subsistence resources. One of the concerns is that the road will eventually open to the public and increase the hunting pressure on a predominantly subsistence hunting area. However, Springsteen said that the life of the road is planned to last for 50 years, after which it will be torn down and reclaimed.

According to Springsteen, there

Substance abuse is a vehicle for numbing a pain. Suicidal thoughts and gestures, depression, anxiety, low self-esteem, anger, difficulty recognizing and expressing emotions— Are these symptoms you recognize in family or friends? Historic trauma is an emotional and psychological wounding occurring over a lifetime and across generations caused by significant group

During a week last November, Nome hosted a week of discussions on historic trauma induced by the epidemics of the 1800s and early 1900s, insensitivity of many early missionaries to the cultures of the peoples they ministered, and by the generations of boarding school experiences that destroyed many indigenous "norms" throughout much of Alaska. One result is the incarceration of disproportionate numbers of Alaska Natives unknowingly suffering from the effects of historic trauma through substance abuse and anger.

Isaiah 61: The Year of the LORD's Favor

<sup>1</sup>The Spirit of the Sovereign LORD is on me, because the LORD has anointed me to proclaim good news to the poor. He has sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim freedom for the captives and release from darkness for the prisoners,

<sup>2</sup> to proclaim the year of the LORD's favor and the day of vengeance of our God, to comfort all who mourn, <sup>3</sup> and provide for those who grieve in Zion—to bestow on them a crown of beauty instead of ashes, the oil of joy instead of mourning, and a garment of praise instead of a spirit of despair.

Treatment for historic trauma must repair connections with others, selfimage, values and beliefs. It takes the forms of individual therapy, spiritual help, and group or community gatherings as important aspects of the healing process. It aims at renewal of hope, positive self-image and spiritual beliefs, renewal of family connections, and reaffirming one's place in the human community. It is important to realize underlying causes of much pain and suffering many of us live in. It is important to understand we do not stand alone. It is imperative we take the first steps of finding peace of mind, peace of heart, and our rightful place in a society with our dignity inare no larger plans to connect AM-DIAR to meet up with the Red Dog mine port terminal or connect to the Nome-Council Highway. Mike Catsi said the remediation would be financed through a fund fed by portions of the road use fee that would be collected from industry using the road. Catsi said the practice of reclaiming old mining roads is common practice in the Lower 48.

NANA's Senior Director of Corporate Communications Shelly Wozniak said that NANA supports the Environmental Impact Statement process moving forward. "But we do not have a position on the road. We support the EIS as it allows for direct engagement from cities, tribes and state residents," she wrote in an email to the Nugget. "It also allows tribes to engage in direct government-to-government consultation and creates avenues of input for regional organizations like the Northwest Arctic Borough, Maniilaq Association and the Northwest Arctic Borough School District. It will gather similar input in other regions. NANA is committed to ensuring that regional communities and shareholders are at the table for this important process."

Asked if NANA sees potential positive or negative impacts from the road, she wrote that it's far too early in the process to even discuss these points. "The EIS must happen first and once that is complete, NANA will, again, directly consult with the shareholders, communities and regional partners, like the Northwest Arctic Borough and Maniilaq Association, to work together to determine a regional path forward. This will happen in consultation with other communities outside of the region as well. The next step is the EIS. We're not looking beyond that at this juncture."

According to Wozniak, NANA held independent shareholder listening sessions within each community in the Upper Kobuk in January 2013 and last May.

4. Be sure of the target, as well as the surroundings and beyond. Be sure what you're about to shoot at. Be sure what is around it and know what is beyond it. There was a rather infamous hunting incident involving a United States Vice President a while back. The Vice President was sure of the target (quail), but he was not sure of the surroundings and beyond and peppered his friend with birdshot. Bullets can ricochet off of water and rocks and can bring a really damaging surprise to someone around or beyond your target.

Ignoring the rules on the basketball court will get the ball turned over and you fouled out before the first quarter is done.

Ignoring the firearm safety rules will cause significant harm, regret and possibly the loss of someone close to you. A lot of energy and time is spent learning the rules of a sport or game you enjoy. Make time to learn, live by and pass on the four firearm safety rules, it will not be a waste of your time.

trailer with onsite storage water and sewage storage, mounted on top of connex vans. The sewage tank is wired shut and can be pumped out into a sewage truck — Teller has none of those —or be dumped per U.S. Coast Guard regulations three miles offshore. Schimschat estimates the area disturbed would amount to three acres

The vessel Au Grabber operated in Nome for one season last year, dredging on state offshore leases for

The owner Richard Schimschat said in an interview with The Nome Nugget that he is sensitive to subsistence users' needs and won't do anything to jeopardize subsistence harvests.

The application lists 12 mineral properties where Schimschat proposes to mine. Schimschat said he wouldn't mine where nets are set for fishing. "The impact of mining there would be minimal," he said. "There are gold dredges in the water in Nome and the rivers are still full of Schimschat said he understands subsistence lifestyles since he has lived in Kotzebue for 14 years and then was employed with STG for 12 years, often working in northwest Alaska. He said he was the foreman on the STG crew that installed the underwater power cable between Brevig Mission and Teller. Last year he became a fulltime miner, owns a home in Nome and is also a TV star on the Discovery Channel reality show "Bering Sea Gold."

The show, he said, would bring a film crew out to Teller to accompany him and his crew as they're mining in Grantley Harbor.

Schimschat said, if DNR permits his operation in Grantley Harbor, he could operate two 12-hour shifts with two people per shift. Without the ocean swells that often force dredges to stay inside the harbor instead of going to work, Schimschat expects a 24/7 mining operation at Grantley Harbor, where the Gold Grabber would be sheltered from rocking wave action. He is aware of the resistance the proposed operation of the Gold Grabber meets. "If people have a hard time in Teller, we'll maybe try with a smaller suction dredge," he said. But he also hopes to bring jobs to the communities.

"I'm waiting for the DNR approval and then work with the people and do whatever I can do to create jobs," he said. For example, he said, he might hire divers, heavy equipment operators, even gold pan-ners and fuel or water deliverers. Schimschat believes that there won't be any impact on fisheries, but the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game Division on Habitat submitted comments to the DNR, stating that out of the 12 mining claims Schimschat submitted, five locations may be adversely affected by the mining because of herring spawning grounds, whitefish, tom cod, clam and trout habitat and the associated ringed, bearded and spotted seals that follow the fish.

According to ADF&G Habitat division comments, the division recommends reducing the potential for impacts to spawning herring and concentrations of subsistence use activities, mining should occur July 10 through July 30 and September 1 through the end of the proposed mining season for Tukuluk Creek. Near Tuksuk Channel, ADF&G recommends mining to not start until October 1; for McKinley Point, mining could occur between July 1 and September 1. At Fourmile Point whitefish and trout are harvested and people dig for clams, so mining should only be done between July 1 and September 1. At Lucky Ditch Creek, whitefish and trout are harvested year round, but mining should occur only between July 1 and September 1, ADF&G recommended.

Bering Straits Native Corporation Vice President Matt Ganley said the corporation has been contacted by shareholders and other residents of the region expressing grave concern over the possibility of offshore dredging in the Grantley Harbor

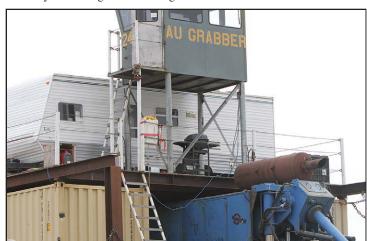

"BSNC is concerned for the potential impact such dredging operations might have on the fragile red salmon run (and other anadromous and non-anadromous species in this ecosystem) that enter the Pilgrim River through Grantley Harbor, Tuksuk Channel and Imuruk Basin," said Ganley in an email to the Nugget. "Further, it is not apparent that DNR has conducted any analysis of such potential impacts, nor have they conducted adequate public scoping meetings in Nome, Teller or Brevig Mission

He said BSNC will be tracking the issue and has already reached out to DNR to express the corporation's

Common Council focuses on tobacco and alcohol tax

By Sandra L. Medearis

Several citizens lobbied theNome Common Council with their support for the City of Nome to levy a higher cigarette tax to discourage smoking among children.

Councilman Jerald Brown picked up the signal.

During council comments at the end of the meeting June 10, asked the City's administration to bring a draft ordinance to the next regular Council meeting to address a sales tax increase on alcohol and tobacco, as well as a seasonal sales tax during the summer visitors' season.

He would like also for the City to explore charging an excise tax on to-

"It has been found that when you raise the price $1 to $2 a pack, and

Crystal Tobuk also asked for a higher tobacco tax, recounting how she started to smoke at 12 years old and worked up to two packs a day until she stopped for the sake of her child at her first pregnancy more. Maybe it will help me to quit.' That's what happened at the opening of the June 10 Nome Common Council meeting.

Councilman Stan Andersen let the elephant into the parlor at the very last of the meeting: the complete funding and future configuration of the Richard Foster Building. The City has about $16 million.

The design and architecture by ECI/Hyer calls for building the City's museum and library facility and, if funding is realized, the nonprofit Kawerak's Beringia Culture and Science Center.

A current 65 percent design plan comprises the shell of the building, with exhibit facilities put on hold pending finding an additional goal of $3.2 million adopted in January to allow Kawerak to take part.

NPFMC seeks input on Bering Sea Fishery Ecosystem Plan

By Laurie McNicholas

The North Pacific Fishery Management Council is considering whether or not to develop a Bering Sea Fishery Ecosystem Plan.

Council members reviewed a staff discussion paper on the topic at a meeting last February in Seattle and decided to move the idea forward while seeking public comment on major questions about the proposal.

In advance of the council meeting held early this month in Nome, council staff sent a flyer explaining the purpose of the proposed Bering Sea FEP to some Nome organiza-

"The BS FEP would not be a regulatory document, and changes to the management of Bering Sea fisheries would continue to be made through fishery management plan amendments," the flyer states. "The FEP could provide an opportunity for the council to express its management values for Bering Sea fisheries, and develop strategies to respond to emerging ecosystem science." The flyer invited public comment on the following questions during a council meeting June 8 in

Subsistence users vent frustration with seasonal miners

By Diana Haecker

During a public meeting hosted by the Alaska Dept. of Natural Resources last week, several members of the non-mining public took to the podium and demanded more respect for the region's subsistence lifestyles and a seat at the table when mining permits are issued.

In response to a pending application to mine gold at Grantley Harbor and Tuksuk Channel, representatives from Teller and Brevig Mission made the trip to Nome to voice their opposition to the permit application of the Gold Grabber LLC.

Since the 2011 DNR offshore mineral lease sale, the DNR meetings are an annual ritual to bring miners up to speed on regulations and requirements associated with offshore mining operations.

But unlike the last two meetings, miners and the regulating agencies this time heard dissent from the pub-People expressed their frustrations

Letters -

Dear Editor:

"Perpetually nodding heads"

If our nation is ever going to pull itself out of the economic doldrums, and stay out of them, it had damned well better first learn that we are all Americans first!

Party affiliation is all well and good, but long before we found it imperative to tack a political title in front of our names, our ancestors fought and bled side by side to establish that which many of us now take for granted!

Case in point:

Today, "Friday the Thirteenth (6/13/14)", after reading a troubling article on Yahoo (The Street) about "Student Loan Debt here in The United States" I immediately contacted Senator Elizabeth Warren, Congresswoman Kay Granger, and the White House Comment Line as well, to express my concerns about why our government is playing the part of "The Devil's Advocate" as concerns the merciless harassment of unemployed college and university graduates who were unwittingly caught up in the bi-partisan economic pipedreams that are now being hawked and promoted by our government these days?

Granted, and with all due respect, some new jobs are now being created, but many of these are minimum wage, part-time, or even volunteer status! Yet this makes no difference to the bean counters in politics who value bogus or inflated employment figures over anything as droll as truth and genuinely Letters to the editor must be signed and include an address and phone number. Thank you notes and

Keeping Secrets

Someone let the cat out of the bag. Those pesky folks in Teller and Brevig Mission got wind of the Gold Grabber's plans to dredge in Grantly Harbor. Oops! Someone forgot to tell the people who live there. Gee Whiz! They should have known to go to the DNR's web site. It sure seems like the State wants to keep its citizens in the dark. It is also apparent that many miners feel that mining is the ultimate fate of the world and folks should come to grips with it. How presumptuous can they get?

It was refreshing to see that when the residents of Mary's Igloo, Teller and Brevig Mission got the notice of an informative mining meeting in Nome they drove over 70 miles to state their concerns. They braved the camouflaged and unwashed and succinctly and precisely stated their opposition to dredging in their backyard. The pristine waters of Grantly Harbor and the Imuruk Basin are home to salmon runs of the highest quality. It is where folks hunt and fish to sustain their subsistence life-style. The government's preoccupation with jobs and economic development overlooks the role of stewardship for our renewable resources. The people of Mary's Igloo, Teller and Brevig Mission deserve kudos for standing up for their rights and their subsistence life-style.

A future with subsistence food on the table and income from fishing is what will benefit the residents of Mary's Igloo, Teller and Brevig. Mining will destroy the ecosystem of Grantly Harbor and negatively impact the folks who live there. The government departments whose actions impact local life-styles need to bend over backward to keep the public informed. They need to understand that posting legal notices on obscure government web sites does not constitute adequate public notice. - N.L.M.-

Again, and having had a first-hand acquaintance with this "Current Stu-Loan Debacle" (http://news.yahoo.com/senate-republicans-block-student-loan-bill-142942667—finance.html),

I personally contacted the above referenced lawmakers today, and although they were cordial enough, I got the distinct impression that their interest was strictly political by nature? And if these career politicians would pull their heads out of that rarified air in Washington, DC for a moment, or wherever else they have their heads stuck in, they might just come to the realization that: "Those government-promoted collection agencies, those who are presently harassing these unemployed graduates over these outstanding student loans, are literally destroying the futures of these young Americans, and maybe even our nation itself, and this before these "Proud, Young Americans" even get the chance to hit the ground running?"

After all, these young patriots did not create, perpetuate or even lie about, this stinking economy, nor do they view our still suffering economy through rose-colored and selfserving glasses, as do far too many of you in government, along with your counterparts within big busi-

And as far as "Those Nodding Heads" from both political factions, might I suggest that they put aside their political ambitions and vested agendas for a moment and realize that they were Americans, fellow citizens, and human beings, long before they sold their souls for their thirty pieces of silver!

And if any of them take offense at any part of my rhetoric, then maybe they should also pick-up (and read) "The U.S. Bill of Rights" again, and in particular the very first Amendment, before it is altered by those who obviously consider "The Freedom of Speech" to be a threat to their sheltered existence! After all, if these "Purely Political Creatures of Habit" can slice deeply into the cornerstone of our entire way of life (the freedom to say what we truly think and believe), then do you really believe that they will stop there?

And by financially assailing and faulting our recent college and university graduates, along with the less than affluent students who rely heavily upon student loans, grants and scholarships to advance our nation's future, then these politically motivated creatures are truly sticking a dagger into the back of all who seek to keep our nation on top!

But regardless of their good intentions, or even their potentially nation-corrupting motivations, the end result just may be the same? "Welcome to membership within the Third World!"

Baby walrus seeks rest on gold dredge

The crew on the gold dredge Julianna had an unusual visitor as a baby walrus sought the company of the miners and used the dredge as a platform to rest. According to Marine Advisory Program agent Gay Sheffield, she received a report on Friday night that a baby walrus rested on the dredge. By Saturday, the walrus had been on the dredge for 24 hours while the miners literally worked around it. "They're social animals, they don't want to be alone," said Sheffield. According to reports, the walrus fell off the dredge on Saturday afternoon and has not been seen since. The marine biologist explained that unlike seals, walrus hate to be by themselves, especially when they are still at a young age. "It's best to not let this animal approach in the water while you're diving," cautioned Sheffield. "Don't be alarmed when it climbs on your dredge, but call immediately the numbers below if it does," she added.

Gay Sheffield can be reached at 434-1149; Kawerak Subsistence Director Brandon Ahmasuk at 443-4265, Eskimo Walrus Commission Vera Metcalf can be reached at 443-4380 or 877-277-4392 or Harbormaster Lucas Stotts at 443-6619.

Baby seals still reported hauling out on beaches

A total of 17 seal pups were reported since May 22, hauling out on Nome's beaches. Most of the pups are healthy. Due to the lack of sea ice they are in need of finding a place to rest. A report came in from Teller that a seal pup was seen hauled out as well. So far, eight pups were reported in June.

Pacific sanctuary announced

President Barack Obama announced on Tuesday his intent to make parts of of the central Pacific Ocean off-limits to fishing, energy exploration and other activities, reports the Washington Post.

The measure will create the world's largest marine sanctuary and double the area fully protected ocean. Commercial fishing, mining and oil exploration will be banned from the area.

Also, the White House created a new task force to tackle illegal fishing and black market seafood.

The London newspaper The Guardian reports that prior to the White House announcement, U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry at an international ocean summit made the case to save the world's oceans because it is a vital security issue.

He urged leaders to take immediate action on overfishing and pollu-

The two-day conference included officials from 80 countries.

The Obama Administration announced these measures to lead a global conservation effort for the oceans. Actor Leonardo DiCaprio donated $3 million to Oceana and pledged another $7 million, during the summit on Tuesday.

Kerry called on leaders to take immediate steps on overfishing, pollution, and changes in ocean chemistry caused by rising carbon dioxide emissions.

Secretary Jewell announces Offshore Oil and Gas Leasing Program for 2017-2022

Secretary of the Interior Sally Jewell and Acting Director of the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management Walter Cruickshank announced the first step in a public engagement process to develop the next schedule of potential offshore oil and gas lease sales. The publication of a Request for information in the federal register begins a 45-day comment period. Substantial public involvement and extensive analysis will accompany all stages of the planning process, which will take up to three years to complete.

"The development of the next Five Year Program will be a thorough and open process that incorporates stakeholder input and uses the best available science to develop a proposed offshore oil and gas program that creates jobs and safely and responsibly meets the energy needs of the nation," said Secretary Jewell. "Today marks the first step of engaging interested parties across the spectrum to balance the various uses and values inherent in managing the resources of federal offshore waters that belong to all Americans and future generations.

The OCS Lands Act requires the Secretary of the Interior, through BOEM, to prepare and maintain a schedule of proposed oil and gas lease sales in federal waters, indicating the size, timing and location of auctions that would best meet national energy needs for the five-year period following its approval. In developing the Five Year Program, the Secretary is required to achieve an appropriate balance among the potential for environmental impacts, for discovery of oil and gas, and for adverse effects on the coastal zone.

BOEM seeks a wide array of input, including information on the economic, social and environmental values of all OCS resources, as well as the potential impact of oil and gas exploration and development on other resource values of the OCS and the marine, coastal and human envi-

Using the information received, BOEM will prepare a Draft Proposed Program, followed by a Proposed Program and a Proposed Final Program. Throughout the planning process, BOEM will consult with all interested parties and seeks additional public comment.

Concurrently, BOEM will prepare a Programmatic Environmental Impact Statement (PEIS) required by the National Environmental Policy Act to evaluate the potential environmental impacts of various OCS oil and gas leasing alternatives under the Proposed Program and to help inform decisions on the Proposed Final

The current Five Year Program for 2012–2017, which expires in August 2017, schedules 15 potential lease sales in six planning areas including off Alaska. The current five year program includes one potential sale each for the Chukchi Sea. Beaufort Sea and Cook Inlet planning areas.

BOEM currently manages about 6,200 active OCS leases, covering more than 33 million acres – the vast majority in the Gulf of Mexico.

Alaska.

That was not funded.

The legislature did not fund any library programs. Rasmuson Foundation declined to give Kawerak $1.2 million for which Kawerak applied.

The Council approved a preliminary contract with ASRC SKW Eskimos with the design at 65 percent, allowing time to determine the funding and cost savings before the Council votes on the main job for the big money.

'We're $3 million and some odd dollars short," Andersen said.

"I don't see, unless somebody gets a loan, either them or us, that we're going to be able to build the 3,300 feet for Kawerak, and the sooner we decide this ... I'm not even sure we can afford to build the building period. I think the architect and engineers designed a building that we can't afford.

"The sooner we confront the fact Kawerak isn't going to get their section built, unless someone comes up with the $3 million, the better off everyone is going to be. We are going to be confronting that at the next meeting." Andersen forecast a hot time in the Council at the next meeting on June 23.

Councilman Matt Culley agreed. 'We've got a lot of can to kick down the road," he said.

Kawerak was to kick the can around with the City administration at a meeting June 17.

Asked what strategies Kawerak would use to follow and bag funding, Amy Russell-Jamgochian, Beringia Center project director, said last week that she would know more after Kawerak met with the City. She also stated that Kawerak has a protocol for releasing information to Nome Nugget and KNOM.

Monday, Russell-Jamgochian sent a press release that did not yet spell out any specific strategy.

"Kawerak and the City of Nome will continue to work to raise the necessary funds between now and June 2015," the release said.

No vote has been held in Council, which bears responsibility for public money, to continue to build on hope and hunt or to decide on Kawerak participation.

The money for the Kawerak portion must be on the table by July 1, several Council members said.

On Monday, June 16, Andersen on the phone was adamant on seeing Kawerak ante in the game.

"It boils down to no loan, no bonding, no going into savings, no waiting until June 2015 to find out whether there is that money," he

"We did our best; we bent over backward and put the project in jeopardy to give them enough time. The more we delay, the more money we lose from the continual increase in cost of labor and materials."

Big money

All five sections of the City's spending plan for the fiscal year 2015 came up for second reading and final passage. The Council passed all of them: general fund budget, $11,262,846; school debt service fund budget, $809,870; special revenue fund budget, $349,552; capital projects fund budget, $15,092,644; and last, a Port of Nome fund budget for $11,989,987, about equal to the City's general fund budget, Councilman Stan Andersen observed.

In other business, the Council:

Approved an agreement with Bechtol Planning & Development for professional planning services, not to exceed a cost of $25,000. City planner Eileen Bechtol, a nationally certified planner, has been working with the Nome Planning Commission and the administration on updating the comprehensive hazard mitigation plan as well as land planning and zoning violation policies.

 Approved a contract for $75,000 with Legislative Consultants in Alaska (Wendy Chamberlain) to lobby for Nome's interests at the state level for spending year 2015.

This item drew comment from Councilman Stanley Andersen.

Dwindling state resources might do away with needing a lobbyist, he observed. "If there is no money, we don't need a lobbyist," he said, but conceded "if she brings in more than $75,000," it would be worth it. Because 80 to 90 percent of the lobbying time last year was spent on funding the middle dock at Port of Nome, some of the lobbying cost would be charged to the port, City Manager Josie Bahnke said.

 Awarded the task of giving Old St. Joe's a new paint job to Mo' Mud Mo' Paint Mo' Better for $60 per hour for a total labor contract capped at $69,522. The City will provide its lift truck to allow George Leckband best access.

· Awarded a contract to Q Trucking Garage for repairing the City's heavy-duty vehicles and equipment for base bids of $90 per hour for repair service, $25 per call plus $3 per mile for wrecker service and cost plus 25 percent for parts and supplies. The contract runs from July 24 through July 23 next year with a oneyear renewal option.

 Adopted a risk management plan for the City of Nome under the auspices of Alaska Municipal League, which entails holding monthly safety meetings and annual training workshops.

 Acknowledged a tremendous job by Candice Weidler, city employee, in coordinating Nome's annual cleanup week and "You Call, We Haul" program.

• Discussed the need for trash receptacles at Middle Beach.

Councilman Tom Sparks pleaded for the City place at least one receptacle to try at least something small, rather than push everyone off.

"How much would it cost to have someone go down there once a week and dump one receptacle?" he asked.

Both Culley and Andersen said they feared that miners and campers would load up a receptacle with honeybuckets (human waste).

"You put a Port-a-potty and its just going to be gross," Culley said.

City Manager Josie Bahnke said the City would leave a dump truck there for a while if one became avail-

"What really needs to happen is the City needs to enforce the zoning code," Andersen agreed.

Nome man hurt in accident

Otis Hukill, 47, was seriously injured while changing a split rim industrial tire on Tuesday, June 10 at a work site in Icy View.

The tire hit him square in the face as it propelled upward.

He suffered severe damage to his face and was medivaced to Anchorage where he underwent extensive surgery and is in serious condition.

His prognosis is guardedly optimistic.

Nome Volunteer Ambulance responded and transported him to Nor-

ANNUAL MEETING - The annual multi-agency meeting filled Old St. Joe's not only with offshore miners but also subsistence users, who voiced their views.

tions," Ahmasuk said.

Several representatives with the Dept. of Natural Resources, the Dept. of Environmental Conservation, the Dept. of Fish and Game, and the U.S. Coast Guard informed the crowd what is expected from offshore miners this season

Before any introductions were made, DNR's Mining Section Chief Scott Pexton let the audience know that a camera crew with the reality show "Bering Sea Gold" was filming the meeting.

Pexton facilitated the meeting and offered a short overview of his agency's division: there are nine DNR employees working in the placer mining permitting division throughout the State. One of them is Natural Resource Technician III Nick Kimmel, who replaces Byron Redburn. Kimmel's job is to be the local point of contact for issues relating to offshore mining. He monitors offshore mining activity, he's a resource for the miners and the nonmining public and he sees to it that rules are obeyed.

DNR's Bill Cole said that a few leases are still tied up in litigation several leases were contested and the issues have not been resolved - but Cole said that those leases are not open ground for miners to jump the claim and mine it.

DNR's Jack Kerin said that the department put forth a clean set of expectations regarding mining and use of the harbor. The DNR added new required information to the permit application, detailing who, why and from where the operators are and also revealing the same information on their work crews.

Also, there are new requirements from the Dept. of Environmental Conservation, which now collects information on turbidity.

"Because larger mechanical operations are going on," Kerin said, "we ask for more information on location and turbidity because of concerns to fisheries and the environment.'

The Dept. of Environmental Conservation's Placer Mine Coordinator Nick Dallman said that his agency issues wastewater permits. Dallman's main concerns are with water turbidity, oil sheen and potential oil spills. New this year is the requirement for suction dredges with intake nozzle diameters larger than six inches and mechanical dredges to maintain a daily turbidity log, giving visual estimates of the turbidity plume stirred up by their operations. "It's an annual report requirement summarized on a one page form whether you operate or not," said Dallman. The daily turbidity log and the DNR and DEC permits are mandatory paperwork required to be on the vessel when operating.

Dallman said this year the jump of permit applications for larger mechanical dredges was noticeable. 'About 20 applications came in for those larger dredges," he said.

Dept. of Fish and Game Area

Fishery Biologist Jim Menard informed the miners to stay 300 feet away from fishing nets. He added that the department expects a big pink salmon run and said there is a good possibility for a commercial pink season and hence nets should be expected in the marine waters.

According to Menard, things went well during the last mining season.

He received only a couple of complaints from fishermen about mining activities. Menard reminded the miners that at the mouth of the Nome River, the land above mean high tide is private land owned by Sitnasuak Native Corporation.

Kawerak Subsistence Director Brandon Ahmasuk disagreed with Menard's statement. He said during the public comment period that he had heard numerous complaints from subsistence users whose fishing efforts were disrupted or interfered with at the mouth of the Nome River.

SPEAKING OUT — Teller Native Corp. President William Topsekok expressed his concern that mining as proposed under the Gold Grabber's application in Grantley Harbor would adversely affect fish and wildlife resources. On behalf of the Teller Native Corp., Topsekok recommended that DNR deny the Gold Grabber LLC's application to mine at Grantley Harbor.

out little old ladies from their traditional subsistence salmon fishing grounds where they have fished for generations," Ahmasuk related.

"Saying that they 'miners' have more right to be there then she does, even flaunting their permits in the air, even going so far as to say that the fumes that are generated from their vessel attracts even more salmon than would normally be there," said Ahmasuk.

Ahmasuk spoke of severe user conflicts at the Nome River mouth.

"Miners are anchored in the river mouth, living on their small vessels, spreading trash all over and going to the bathroom right from their vessel in plain sight of everyone, even small children," he said.

Ahmasuk also commented that DNR handed out permits for off-shore mining near Sledge Island and the mouth of the Sinuk River without consulting tribal governments or subsistence users. He said that thousands of migratory birds utilize the area and Sledge Island, as do marine mammals such as walrus and four species of ice seals. "Did DNR consult with anyone other than miners on the negative impacts that mining would have on subsistence users' activities? NO," he said.

"Local residents are fed up with the treatment they are being dealt," he said. "At times it seems non-local miners who are only here for the money and then leave, are given preferential treatment and the residents are stuck with the aftermath."

City Manager Josie Bahnke made a short speech, welcoming the miners to Nome. "Nome and mining go hand in hand. We hope you enjoy your time here, be safe and help keep our town clean." Bahnke said.

Harbormaster Lucas Stotts asked the miners to be mindful of the maintenance dredging going on inside the harbor and the mouth of the Snake River and to be alert to what's going on around them. Stotts asked the dredgers to take the long way around the causeway to exit the harbor and to not use the shortcuts in the causeway and break wall.

U.S. Coast Guard Ltn. Brierley Ostrander informed the dredgers that a Coast Guard crew was offering free dockside exams to check safety gear on the vessels. "Those are free and done at your convenience," she said. "If you pass, you will get a decal you can display on your vessel." But she also gave a stern heads-up that if boarded and safety gear is found missing or insufficient, the Coast Guard may shut the vessel down.

"Boarding teams will be operating at our convenience and if you're not in compliance, we can terminate your operation," she said.

In terms of pollution, reporting is mandatory. "You are required to report any amount of oil spilled into the water," she said. "Not optional, mandatory!"

She also cautioned that the closest airborne rescue group is stationed in Kodiak, a two hour flight away from Nome – at best – and to avoid accidents by staying alert. "Alcohol and fatigue are the main reasons for accidents," she said.

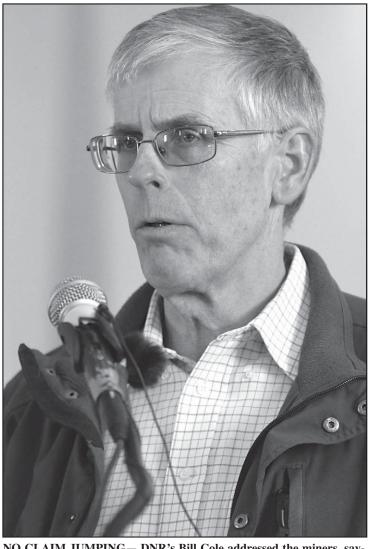

Marine Advisory Program agent Gay Sheffield asked the miners to keep an eye out for sick seals, as there still is an unusual mortality event investigation going on to find the cause of a seal disease that had its peak in 2011. Sheffield asked if dredgers spot seals that seem lethargic, with sores and patchy looking fur, to report it to her or Kawerak Subsistence Director Brandon Ahmasuk.

She also alerted the miners that due to a lack of sea ice, a number of seal pups have been reported hauled out on beaches near and in Nome, even inside the harbor. "They're healthy pups, they're just tired and need a place to rest," she said.

She also asked the miners to stay away from large marine mammals.

Last year, a pod of transient killer whales attacked a mother and calf grey whale near East Beach and as a large number of people viewed the epic battle from shore, a boat with a film crew rushed toward the violent fight of thousands of pounds of angry marine mammals thrashing about. "It's is not only a federal violation to approach whales like this but is also is not very smart," she said. If large marine mammals fight in this manner, Sheffield said, "Get your diver out of the water and leave the area."

Among the stacks of paperwork available to the public, the Dept of Revenue's Tax division educated miners on the mining license tax. Every mining operation needs an annual mining license and must file a mining license tax return, due on April 30. But according to the Dept. of Revenue, only mining operations with a net income of more than $40,000 are taxed. If the income is less than $40,000, there is zero tax due. For outfits making more than $40,000, the mining company pays $1,200 plus three percent of the amount that exceeds $40,000. However, with the exemption of sand and gravel mining operations, a mining license tax exemption is allowed for three and one half years after a new mining operation begins commercial production.

New mining operations are not exempt from the annual production royalty collected by DNR's division of mining, land and water. The production royalty is due every calendar year when minerals on state land are sold, exchanged or removed from Alaska. It is three percent of the net income on all revenues received, according to the DNR forms.

The City did not receive any direct benefit from the DNR lease sale that brought $7.5 million to the state treasury, but asked the Dept. of Commerce, Community and Economic Development to conduct a survey to determine the miners' economic impact on Nome and how much the seasonal miners are spending in the city on groceries, housing and accommodations, equipment purchases, maintenance, fuel and other items.

Public comments began with William Topsekok, president of the Teller Native Corporation. Topsekok read a letter to Jack Kerin that spelled out the reasons for the opposition of Teller Native Corp. to the proposed Gold Grabber LLC operation. "The ecology of fish and wildlife resources, migratory birds and subsistence way of life will be adversely impacted if mining should occur," said Topsekok after listing fish species, seal species and bird species that frequent Grantley Harbor

Nobody from the DNR responded, but DEC's Nick Dallman said the larger dredge applications extend to the latitude of Cape Rodney and any operation north of the Cape would require more environmental studies. "It is unlikely we could permit a dredge to operate there this summer," Dallman said. An environmental assessment would need to be done prior to DEC's approval. "It takes months to complete an assessment like that and it would require a contractor to do that."

Inez Tocktoo with the Brevig Mission Native Corp. spoke about how her ancestors taught her what to hunt and what not to hunt during the different seasons. "We learned how to survive off the land and the sea. We don't trophy hunt." She stressed the fact that summers offer a short opportunity to fish and put away food for the long winters. "Summer is always a blessing for many of us, the sea, the many bays and the ocean round us bring us many varieties of fish," she said. "We need to protect the waters around us, Grantley Harbor, Graphite Bay, Port Clarence and Point Riley," Tocktoo stated. "My father always said to me 'Ban-ik [daughter], take care of the land and sea and both will take care of your for many years to come.""

A young miner stepped up and passionately disagreed. "We miners are also living off the land," he said. He made a case for perpetuating the tradition of mining and to teach it to the younger generation. He said miners support their families, too, with their vocation. "No, don't stop this, that would be unacceptable."

Miner Steve Riedel also commented that any Bering Sea storm causes more turbidity than do all of the suction dredges combined. Another miner asked the agencies whether there have been studies done on turbidity caused by offshore mining and its effects on salmon. Yet another asked, "Why should we keep a daily turbidity log when the salmon run upriver if it's turbid or not?"

DEC's Nick Dallman answered saying that last year the DEC conducted a turbidity study that he hopes to continue this summer. "This year, we just require a visual measurement," Dallman said. "There is a benefit for you, too, when you provide that data."

Carolyn Oquilluk spoke for the City of Teller and read a letter signed by the City Council and by Blanche Garnie, the Mayor of Teller. Together with the tribal organizations, she said, Teller and Brevig Mission are opposed to mining and dredging in Grantley Harbor and Tuksuk Channel.

Nome's Perry Mendenhall began his comment saying that he is promining and also pro-subsistence. He made the case of cooperation and for co-existence, but he also said that people need to weigh the costs. "Our corporations...everybody was willing to do Rock Creek, and now we tear that building down," Mendenhall said. "We've got to weigh the costs. We depend on the salmon and game cycles." He asked the miners to keep in mind that when subsistence users put in a net, they fish for food for several families. And he said, "We knew that you were coming. We gave a lot already. We let your run your course. But remember we were here before you."

At last, the captain of the mining dredge Wild Ranger, Vernon Adkisson took to the podium. "I have nothing but respect for the people who have lived here a long time. I mined here for four years. I like Nome, I don't want to harm it," Adkisson said. "I know that about 15 to 20 percent of the miners are dirt bags and when I hear of them cussing out old ladies, I find it unacceptable and rude. I would like to see the miners clean up their act. That goes for me, to work the same transport of the miners are dirt would like to see the miners clean up their act. That goes for me, the same transport of the miners are dirt would like to see the miners clean up their act. That goes for me, the same transport of the miners are dirt would like to see the miners clean up their act. That goes for me, the same transport of the miners are directly as the same transport o

Normal levels detected in sea water sampled for radiation

By Diana Haecker

Last week, the Center for Marine and Environmental Radioactivity associated with the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution, released the radiation results of a seawater sample taken from the Bering Sea near Gambell.

The results show a non-detectable level of Cesium 134, the radionuclide associated with the Fukushima nuclear plant. The lab also tested for Cesium 137, another Fukushima associated element, results show a level of 1.3 Bq per 264 gallons. This, said UAF researcher Doug Dasher, is very near normal background levels. "Levels of concerns for bioaccumulation would be hundreds of Becquerel, if not thousands per square meter," Dasher said.

Regional concerns that the Bering Sea could be radioactively contaminated from the 2011 failure of the Fukushima Dai-Ichi nuclear power plant spurred local organizations to act

In March, University of Alaska, Fairbanks Marine Advisory Program agent Gay Sheffield and Norton Sound Economic Development put money towards a crowd-sourcing website organized by marine radio chemist Dr. Ken Buessler of the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution and its Center for Marine and Environmental Radiation.

The website is part of the project "How radioactive is our ocean?" and functions as a portal for donations. The donations are used towards the analysis of ocean waters for radioactive materials at a specific site. For each $600 raised, a sample can be sent to Dr. Buessler's lab in Massachusetts.

In April, a sampling kit headed to Eddie Ungott in Gambell, who then took a ride out to the edge of the sea ice, about 4.5 miles offshore from Gambell and filled the bucket with five gallons of Bering Sea water. The sample was then put on a Bering Air flight to Nome and then sent to Woods Hole, Massachusetts.

So far, one sample was collected and has been analyzed, but experts say that it would be wise to continue monitoring radioactive levels once a year.

Although the results indicate that the current radioactive levels stem from the fallout of nuclear weapons testing done in the 1950s and 1960s by several countries, unknowns remain. Doug Dasher cautioned that it is not known if the computer models were accurate when they predicted the radioactive plume would arrive at the U.S. West Coast in spring of 2014.

Dasher also said t there is a big gap in offshore monitoring of seawater radiation to track the plume. He also pointed out the need to sample seawater along the Aleutian Island chain.

Despite the concerns of scientists and residents, no funding is available for Dasher to buy chemicals to process samples or to hire a technician to help with the task.

He hopes to get a few water samples from the UAFs Seward Line, a long-term observation program in the Gulf of Alaska to research the marine ecosystem's response to climate variability. "We keep hoping to find support to where we can sample sea water on a yearly basis," he said. In the meantime, the crowd-sourcing website to finance another round of testing is the region's best bet to get a second sample analyzed.

The federal Food and Drug Administration is sampling commercially caught fish for radiation, but besides that effort, Dasher, in collaboration with the North Slope Borough are the only entities to sample marine mammals for radiation.

So far, Dasher said, the ringed seal samples he was provided did not show any elevated levels of Cs 137. The tests were done in conjunction with the federal Unusual Mortality Event investigation to find answers to a mysterious disease that affected ice seals along the Alaskan coast, peaking in 2011.

considered in the FEP? Should the FEP provide specific or general guidance for fishery management (for example, strategies to respond to climate change, preserve subsistence fishing and hunting resources, maintain healthy populations of top level predators, etc.)?

• Would the FEP provide added value over existing council documents, and if so, how (for example, annual Stock Assessment and Fishery Evaluation reports, essential fish habitat descriptions, etc.)?

Rose Fosdick, Kawerak, Inc. natural resources vice president told the council the Bering Strait region is experiencing great changes related to climate change, such as increased shipping traffic and interest in Bering Sea resources. She said area residents are especially concerned about the Bering Strait because it is only 50 miles wide between the Alaska and Chukotka mainlands, and because the community of Little Diomede (population about 100) sits in the strait within the U.S. boundary. Fosdick also noted reports of new marine species moving into the

"For example, not always have people seen sea lions on St. Lawrence Island, but now scientists are keeping track of the population as it comes and goes," Fosdick said. "Other species that are being observed in the water are really unusual to our small communities." Scientists have been unable to identify the source of a disease that has caused skin lesions, sores and lethargy among a number of area ice seals in recent years, Fosdick noted.

Ice seal areas mapped

Fosdick said Kawerak's social science program has used traditional knowledge gathered from small communities to complete a mapping project of waters used by ice seals throughout the region. The program also has mapped important habitat and harvest areas for non-salmon fish species near a number of communities, she added.

"Tomcod, a staple food for us at almost any time of year, small fish like pike and saffron cod and quite a long list of other non-salmon fish are harvested throughout the year, in winter through the ice, in summer with nets," Fosdick noted. She said Kawerak's social scientist (Julie Raymond-Yakoubian) also has documented the traditional knowledge of walrus hunting and use by Diomede people.

"In using traditional knowledge, you have to work with small communities," Fosdick said. "Nome is more of a hub, and we have 16 communities in our region. Most of those communities are very small, but they have been residing in this area for thousands of years, and all of them are along the coastline except for one." She said the communities are situated along the coast because they rely so heavily on ocean resources.

Planning recommendations

Fosdick asked council members to consider the following recommendations as they explore the potential usefulness of a Bering Sea FEP.

• Document information on subsistence—the lifestyle and resources upon which Bering Sea people rely; on climate change and its impacts such as increased shipping traffic, and on new marine species moving into the region.

• Gain an understanding of the economies of small communities in the region in relation to the value of subsistence life ways.

Noting a significant movement of Noting a significant movement of people from small communities to Nome and Anchorage, Fosdick pointed to the lack of jobs and money. "You can go to a small community like Wales or Shishmaref or Brevig Mission or Diomede and there'll be a couple of positions for teachers, a postmaster, someone to take care of the airport, some agents for the two major airlines, a store, a couple store workers and that's about it," she noted. She said Kawerak staff will put together more information and send it in a comment letter to the council.

Uses for an FEP

Bill Tweit, chairman of the council's ecosystem committee asked Fosdick to include in Kawerak's letter how an FEP could benefit Kawerak in what Kawerak is doing. "Hopefully, it would be a document that should we choose to do this would have fairly broad use, and so I guess it may be more of a request than a question, actually—I'm wondering if you could also think of some other organizations that might be weighing in by letter that maybe we could target more specifically so that we get some more input at this stage," he said. "At this very early stage, it's your opportunity to really help shape what the council may do."

"I'm going to have to think and talk with people within our organization and the communities we work with," Fosdick replied "We do work with all the traditional communities within our region, and I have to ask them a few questions about how we might give you some good recommendations on that." She emphasized that the communities Kawerak represents are always interested in fisheries resources and changes that affect them.

Tweit told Fosdick that an FEP would be a great opportunity to address the impacts of a rapidly changing environment she cited, such as diseased ice seals and increased shipping in Bering Strait. "So I place as much emphasis, at least as one council member, on the ecosystem part of the Fishery Ecosystem Plan," he added.

Council member Duncan Fields noted that the Alaska Ocean Observing System incorporates traditional historic and cultural knowledge into its observations. He suggested that Kawerak staff may want to discuss with AOOS staff the observations they receive from Bering Strait communities on climate change impacts.

Public input opportunities

The council has tentatively scheduled opportunities for public input on the proposed Bering Strait FEP on Aug. 21, 3:30-6:00 p.m. in Anchorage (location to be announced) and Sept. 15, 3:30-6:00 p.m. at the Alaska Fisheries Science Center in Seattle. The council will receive a public input report on the proposed plan at its October meeting in Analysis

Young entrepreneurs learn business skills on Lemonade Day

By Diana Haecker

Try to sell lemonade on a breezy day with temperatures just above freezing. Although customers played along, it was a hard sell for young entrepreneurs of the region participating in Lemonade Day events held in 2012 and 2013. This year was different and weather cooperated to make customers more amiable to purchase mouth-puckering refreshments.

Koyuk, Teller, Brevig Mission, Gambell, Golovin, Shishmaref, White Mountain, Unalakleet and Nome joined thousands of kids across the State trying their business skills by selling baked goods, sandwiches, fry bread, lemonade and other eclectic things. Devon Crowe in Icy View, for example, used the opportunity to sell his little fourwheeler; a sign attached mentioned it needed a little work.

Other kids used the event to raise money for a good cause. Ellie and Joe Martinson, Makayla and Sophia Marble, and Avery Immingan staffed the "Hope for Jens Lemonade Stand." They sold a lunch combo, with either a Polish hot dog or a lunch hot dog, pink lemonade, baked goods, Rice Krispies and homemade cheesecake. They raised $1,250 for Jens Hildreth, who is undergoing medical treatment and battling a rare cancer.

The communities of St. Michael and Shaktoolik will hold their events in Mid-June.

Lemonade Day is a community educational program teaching youth how to start, own and operate their own businesses.

According to Kawerak Inc. Business Planning Specialist Alice Bioff, the days leading up to the event took some planning and preparation by the children with a caring adult by their sides. Wells Fargo sponsored the Lemonade Day workshop in Nome and staff used the Lemonade Day workbook to assist the youth to learn the following life skills: setting goals, planning for success, budgeting, finding investors and advertising ing.

"Most important, we wanted to see the kids have fun, learn the basics of business and empower the youth to take ownership of their lives and become active members of the community," Bioff wrote in an email.

To follow up, the kids will be treated to a "Splash it up" party on Thursday, June 19 at the Mini Convention Center. If children turn in their business results forms, they will be entered in a drawing for a bike, courtesy of Nome AC.

Sitnasuak's Board of Directors, staff, shareholders, shareholder descendants, and family members all came together to discuss Sitnasuak's business operations, community involvement, and shareholders' concerns. The meeting was held in the Nome Elementary School cafeteria on May 31. Throughout the day, the cafeteria was filled with smiles, hugs, laughter, and of course delicious food.

Dan Karmun, Sr. gave the invocation for the meeting. Mr. Karmun spoke of honesty, love, and respect. His inspirational words echoed throughout the room. "It was the elders that kept us going," said Mr.

Karmun. Portraits of many influential Nome Elders, who have guided and encouraged many of us, graced the walls reinforcing our Inupiaq values. Mr. Karmun also highlighted the importance of our new and younger shareholders – who are in essence the future of Sitnasuak.

Guest speaker, Tuesona Tungwenuk moved the crowd with her speech about the power of perseverance and positive energy, earning a standing ovation. Tuesona described her personal life journey, focusing on the importance of education, pursuing your dreams, and hard work (sagiknatuak sauaq). As a Sitnasuak Foundation scholarship recipient, Tuesona exemplifies the next generation of shareholder and shareholder descendants who will carry on the knowledge of our Elders.

Esther Bourdon and her daughter, Josie Bourdon illustrated key Sitnasuak values: commitment to family (munnakLui ki unnaisi), love of children (nagguagiktut ilagit), pride in culture (puyaunau iupiaqtun iL-Lusiq), as well as the importance of acquiring Native food. They guided us through a photo slide show connecting Esther's past to her present, from her family in Wales to her grandchildren picking blueberries on the tundra. Esther and Josie portrayed the importance of transferring and sharing knowledge from one generation to the next.

The meeting was led by Chairman Bobby Evans. Presentations were given by President Chuck Fagerstrom, CEO David Hoffman, Anchorage Shareholder Liaison Larry Keller, Land Manager Austin Ahmasuk, Director Barb QasuGlana Amarok, and audit manager Chris Morgan from Grant Thorton. Co-Elders of the year, Vince Pikoganna and Bill Hoogendorn, Sr. were presented with plaques for their contributions and dedication to Sitnasuak. Representatives, Jadyn Otton and Andrea Irrigoo from Teens Against Tobacco Use (TATU) presented a thank you letter to Sitnasuak for supporting TATU's goals to make Nome smoke free by educating the community on the harmful effects of tobacco use.

Shareholders and descendants of shareholders raised important topics. Several shareholders expressed concerns over the decline in local salmon runs. Several shareholders also communicated concerns about offshore mining and non-local miners and their negative impacts.

Trudy Sobocienski was elected to the Board of Directors and current directors Barb (QasuGlana) Amarok, Helen C. Bell and Jason Evans were re-elected. Trudy is the daughter of Irene and Ralph "Babe" Anderson. Her maternal grandparents are the late Grace and Arthur Johnson and her paternal grandparents are the late Katherine and Amos Turner, and Charles "Curly" Anderson. She previously served on the Board of Directors from 2008 to 2009, and she was the President/CEO from 2009 to 2010.

Bobby Evans expressed his appreciation for outgoing board member Gloria Ann Karmun's service to the board. She served on the Board of Directors from 2007 to 2014 and from 1998 to 2007. Gloria also expressed her gratitude towards Sitnasuak and its shareholders. She is the daughter of Dan and Ethel Karmun.

Sitnasuak would like to thank all who attended and made the Forty-First Annual Meeting a success. We look forward to a prosperous future and for the continuation of working together. Quyaanna.

Jump-Start your workout: Sports nutrition in eight steps

By Kendra Miller, MPH, RDN,

Miller Health Consulting, LLC

Summer is here and with it comes the desire to be outside in the warm sun. What better way to enjoy the Land of the Midnight Sun than a late night jog or an afternoon hike up Anvil Mountain? Whatever way you decide to increase your daily activity during the season, it's imperative you monitor your nutrition status to coincide with your new rou-

For serious athletes, this translates to a greater focus on proper nutrition for prime performance. If you are just beginning an exercise regimen, you'll want to focus on balancing your energy intake with your exercise output. Regardless of your current exercise status, healthy nutrition will play a vital role in helping you get the most out of your workout.

Here are eight simple steps to give you a jump-start on the road to achieving optimal sports nutrition

1. Eat frequently: Five to seven small meals a day are recommended with vigorous exercise regimens. Eat breakfast before early morning workouts in order to maintain endurance and ideal performance throughout the morning routine. Small meals throughout the remainder of the day will continue to keep your metabolism going strong.

2. Balance your plate: Combine complex carbohydrates, lean proteins, and healthy fats to increase satiety. Eating balanced meals at routine times throughout the day is important to keep your body regulated. Just as you exercise on a regular schedule, your body likes to enjoy balanced meals on a regular schedule.

3. Eat the rainbow: Eat a variety of fruits and vegetables to balance vitamin and mineral intake. Your plate should be half-filled with fruits and vegetables at every meal.

4. Watch portion sizes: Pre- and post-workout snacks are a great idea but don't overdo it. A pre-workout snack should include about 30 grams of carbohydrates whereas a postworkout snack should contain about 15 grams of protein. This can be a few pieces of toast before a workout and a glass of milk afterwards.

5. Stay hydrated: Choose low calorie beverages such as water or unsweetened tea instead of sugarsaturated options during the day. Sports and energy drinks contain a lot of sugar and are not necessary for workout recovery. Instead, choose a healthier option for a recovery drink. Though water is the optimum source of hydration, try milk for good dose of protein and adequate hydration if you are seeking a healthy recovery drink.

6. Get to know your kitchen: Learn to cook and prepare food in your kitchen as opposed to going out to eat. When you eat food you prepare, you know exactly what ingredients you are eating and are more likely to eat the appropriate serving

7. Explore food: Alleviate boring mealtimes. Don't be afraid to pick up new food items at the grocery store or try new recipes from your friend. You never know what delicious tastes you may encounter and what new health trends you may enjoy. 8. Sleep well: Allow your body time to recover and repair. When you complete strenuous workouts, nutrients can become depleted and muscles fatigued. By exercising a regular sleep schedule, your body can benefit from the restorative effects occurring during relaxation.

Whether you are a seasoned athlete or weekend warrior, healthy nutrition is crucial to help any fitness enthusiast achieve their goals.

When you apply these eight steps, you have the potential to not only transform your diet but also see your workouts thrive!

New $CO_2$ rule must extend to oil & gas

By Rick Steiner

The U.S. EPA rule proposed recently to reduce carbon emissions from electrical power plants is a positive step nationally, but as currently written it will do little to reduce Alaska's emissions, where electric utilities contribute only a small part of the Greenhouse Gas (GHG) total.

The 2008 State of Alaska GHG Inventory estimates that, while total GHG emissions in Alaska are about 53 million tons per year, emissions from the electricity generation sector are only about 3 million tons per year.

By far the two largest sources of GHG emissions here in Alaska are the oil & gas industry (15 million tons) and commercial aviation (12 million tons), together accounting for over half our annual total. As proposed, the EPA rule does nothing to reduce these, or other emission sources. Thus, while this new rule will make a difference nationally and should be adopted, in Alaska it won't reduce our total emissions by more than one or two percent. Every little bit helps, but we can't ignore the big bits.

If we really want to make a dent in Alaska's carbon emissions, we need to address our two largest sources – oil & gas, and commercial aviation. At a minimum, the proposed EPA rule should be expanded to include the oil & gas sector, which in Alaska is the single largest emission source.

Alaska's Renewable Energy Fund

has been helpful, but absent emissions regulation or a carbon tax, it will not be enough to substantially reduce emissions

Of course the largest part of Alaska's carbon footprint is the oil, gas, coal produced for export, which is not accounted for in the Alaska GHG inventory. At peak oil production, Alaska oil exports contributed over 300 million tons of CO<sub>2</sub> a year to the global atmosphere. The 17 billion barrels of oil produced in Alaska to date have added over 7 billion tons of CO<sub>2</sub> to the global atmosphere.

Thus, with only 0.01percent of world population, Alaska has contributed roughly 1 percent of the total anthropogenic carbon to the global atmosphere throughout history. So, Alaska owns at least 1 percent of the climate chaos in the world.

Considering that the current annual cost of climate change worldwide already exceeds $1 trillion, together with the World Health Organization estimate that 150,000 deaths each year are linked to these emissions, Alaska's current share of the global carbon impact is at least $10$ billion and 1,500 deaths per year. Economists still fail to account for these indirect costs of carbon economies.

Regardless what we do with emissions here in Alaska, a dramatic reduction in global carbon emissions is undeniably in our long-term interest. To stabilize world climate and ecosystems, global carbon emissions need to drop 80 percent below current levels. This will be difficult, but it is achievable with broader emissions regulation, greater efficiency standards, a carbon tax, and cap-and-trade markets.

Alaska needs to do more than simply study climate change. Rather than habitually opposing all efforts to reduce carbon emissions nationally and globally, it would be in Alaska's enlightened self-interest to join such efforts. It is not only possible for a carbon-exporting state like Alaska to advocate more responsible and efficient use of carbon globally, it is an ethical imperative, particularly as Alaska has contributed disproportionately to global climate change, and climate change represents such a direct threat to the future of Alaska.

And, we need to get serious with efforts to manage and adapt to the effects of climate change here at home, as proposed in the 2010 Alaska Climate Change Strategy. Unfortunately on this issue, Alaska state government has been missing-in-action.

Governor Parnell terminated the former Alaska Climate Change Sub-Cabinet, and has declined requests to join other western states in addressing regional climate change issues. And the legislature has ignored the climate issue. State neglect on this issue is a serious mistake.

Hopefully in the near future, wisdom and reason may transcend the shortsighted petro-politics of Alaska, and state government will begin to provide the necessary leadership on this grave threat to the future of Alaska.

ologist based in Anchorage, and was a marine conservation professor with the University of Alaska from 1980 - 2010, stationed in Kotzebue, Cordova, and Anchorage.

Saying It Sincerely

By Rev. Karen Sonray, Our Savior Lutheran Church

"Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." (The Lord's Prayer) "For while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." (Romans 5:8)

Quite a few years ago an elder told me that while he lived in Nome he drove taxicab for a living. Often he would bring a passenger to their destination and when it came time for them to pay, they would say, "I don't have the money, can I owe you?" At that point he had little choice but to say yes.

He began to make a list of each person's name, keeping record of what they owed him. He kept that record book in the glove compartment. The list got long and so did some of the amounts owed. Many of these "debtors," Nome being a small town, were his relatives, friends— rarely were they strangers.

How would you feel if someone did that to you? Or better yet, how do you feel when someone does that to you? Do you resent them — seethe inside when you see them approach? Do you become angry when you hear that repeated phrase — "Sorry, next time. I can't pay you now, but I will."

How would you feel if you were the one who owed the payments? Would you go out of your way to avoid the person? Try not to look them in the eyes? Would you pretend you didn't remember? Would you inwardly discount the whole matter as "not really your fault" or "not really that important"?

Well, that's what was happening to this elder friend of mine who relayed the story to me years afterward. It got so it affected what he thought of these individuals and clouded his relationship with each of them. He had a bad attitude and resented them when he scanned the list. When he ran into these individuals, their "debt" would be the first think on his mind. It was destroying his relationships with them and eroding his own spirit.

One day he finally had enough. He had an "ah ha" moment.

He opened up that glove compartment. He took out the record book with its long list of names and amounts owed. And he ripped up each page and threw them away.

He said it changed his attitude toward those people and lifted a weighty burden from his psyche. He could look them in the eye again. He began to treat each as a fellow human being again.

In a deeper and more profound way, God has ripped up that page, that record he has on us. All the times we have disappointment, all our failures, all the times we have missed the mark, judged others — the list has been ripped. God did this that we might be forgiven our debts (which can also be translated from the original Greek as our sins, our trespasses) and in right relationship with God. We have been forgiven in the life, death and resurrection of Jesus. Believe and live in this truth and give thanks to God.

"For while we were yet sinners Christ died for us." Romans 5: 8

Schedule set for central issuance of new driver licenses

A general reminder that Alaska DMV has begun central issuance of driver licenses and identification cards (ID) using the following schedule:

Northern Region: including Nome, Kotzebue, and Barrow will start central issuance around June 13-19, 2014. Additionally Alaska DMV has received questions from the public and business sectors on central issuance. We'd like to bring a few of those new FAQ items to your attention.

Frequently Asked Questions (FAQ) for Central Issuance:

Will this require any action on the resident's part when a license expires?

The process is exactly the same as the current practice of renewing your license – only that you will receive a temporary card while a new card is mailed to your address of record. No new action on the resident's part when you go into a DMV.

If you renew your card online, then you will be mailed a temporary license or identification card that is valid for 60 days. This process is similar to DMV's current process. If you renew your license or identification card online, then your permanent card will be mailed to you, and you should receive it in approximately two weeks.

Is DMV collecting my private information?

The information that was collected previously is the same information that will be collected under central issuance. Photo, legal name, DOB, height, weight, sex, eyes, etc. – all the same. Only the issuance from a central, secure site and printed security features to ensure it is harder to counterfeit are changed.

Do these cards have RFID chips in them?

Alaska's new card does not have an RFID chip that some "enhanced" licenses have in other states. In fact, the legislature passed laws in 2008 and reaffirmed them in 2013 that Alaska will not spend money toward REAL ID features such as an RFID chip.

DEC monitors fuel spill cleanup at NSHC hospital

By Diana Haecker

A fuel tank at the Norton Sound Regional Hospital spilled a large amount of diesel fuel #1 in the early morning hours of Friday, June 20.

Since then, trucks have been hauling fuel-contaminated gravel away as part of the cleanup efforts.

The cleanup is overseen by the Fairbanks office of the Dept. of Environemental Conservation, State Coordinator On-Scene DeRuyter confirmed.

DEC's Environmental Program Specialist Patrick Sartz said he received a report of the spill at 5:10 a.m. on Friday morning. A DEC spill report says that a local resident detected a fuel odor from the hospital and reported the spill to DEC.

"Initially there were conflicting reports as to how much fuel spilled,' Sartz said.

He said fuel escaped from one of the three 15,000 diesel fuel tanks at the hospital. The spill report says that NSHC reported that fuel leaked from above ground storage tank 2, which has no lined secondary containment.

While tank 2 was being filled, the actuator valve failed and caused the tank to overflow.

Sartz said an overflow alarm sounded at 4:11 a.m. and hospital personnel responded to the alarm.

According to Sartz, the pump rate

pital maintenance employees were at the tanks to switch off the valves, the gravel underneath the tanks was already soaked with fuel

The spill report says that NSHC staff iniated a cleanup using absorbent pads and boom to recover pooled fuel.

Sartz estimates that 800 to 1,200 gallons of diesel spilled.

The spill was reported to Nome dispatch and, according to Nome Volunteer Fire Department Chief Matt Johnson, several fire fighters responded around 5 a.m. to check the

Humans to give musk oxen plenty of room

By Sandra L. Medearis

Musk oxen have proven themselves harmful to dogs. Musk oxen continue to add numbers to violent deaths and injuries to dogs in the Nome area.

Musk oxen confuse dogs with wolves, an enemy to them and their young, say biologists.

Musk oxen, which are rambling without restraint throughout Nome this summer, come into yards and attack dogs, even dogs restrained by

Again, biologists think muskoxen from predation by brown bears and

But do musk oxen present a danger of death or injury to humans?

Maybe yes, maybe no. Scientists and everyday people who have experience with the hairy, squat, prehistoric-appearing animals have differing opinions.

"I am afraid to go out of my house when they are there," Sarah Swartz said. "I feel so helpless."

A musk ox gashed her dog Cole's chest when she put the German shepherd out in the yard on a chain to do his business before bedtime. A musk ox came into her vard and gored the dog with its sharp, stout

Swartz had a rifle and let off a couple shots as the animal ran off into the willow bushes.

Musk oxen appear regularly near the bike trail along the main drag out gers along the roads.

Game biologists estimate there are more than 3,000 of the shaggy herbivorous ungulates on the Seward Peninsula stemming from 35 animals transplanted in 1981 at the Port Clarence Coast Guard Station about 100 miles northwest of Nome.

Alaska Chadux to conduct spill drill outside Port of Nome

By Diana Haecker

When beach goers and harbor users see several vessels offshore place boom and other oil containment equipment in the water, they should not panic.

Provided that no real spill happens, it is just a drill, conducted by Alaska Chadux Corporation with the help of local fishermen and vessel operators. They will be conducting an oil spill response training exercise outside the harbor.

Chadux is a non-profit memberfunded spill response organization. The Anchorage-based company provides oil pollution compliance help to member companies that move or store petroleum products in Alaska and Alaskan waters.

Bonanza Fuel LLC and Crowley Marine are Chadux members, who operate facilities in Nome. Other members are Delta Western and Vitus Marine, which deliver fuel to tank farms in the region.

Chadux' general manager Matt Melton wrote in an email correspondence with the Nome Nugget that Alaska Chadux has conducted spill response training sessions in Nome over the past six or seven years.

"Typically, we have trained individuals from member company facilities who may be responding to local fuel spills," Melton wrote.

However, the company is currently testing a program that was developed last year and is called "Vessel of Opportunity" program. While Chadux doesn't train vessel owners and crew to be spill responders, the company utilizes local boats and crews for their local knowledge and expertise. Chadux has its own specialized spill response equipment and trained personnel to operate it.

"What we require is a solid and safe work platform for the equipment, someone to operate and crew that platform, and someone with local knowledge of the area," Melton explained.

'While we are sending our crews to Nome in the event of an incident, the vessels of opportunity can be getting ready to respond—loading gear, fueling up, etc. Once we arrive and determine our role in the overall response, we can brief the teams and head out."

Hi People,

Wow, people thought that when they signed the leases on the house they are buying, that they would be paying that set amount for X amount of years. Especially since those house have had some problems, of which, I believe, the homeowner might have had to pay for out of their own pocket. Once the prices are set, I thought they are not supposed to change and yet, they want to raise the prices on their rent.

Why doesn't the Government just give us all raises so maybe we would be able to accommodate every thing else they've raised?

It saddens me that people let the cycle of abuse go on. Why not stop it? You do not have to live that way. You are just teaching your kids that it is OK to get hit. Chances are thy will do that to their kids because that's the way they grew up to think its OK. Is that how you want your grandkids to grow up?

Then again, maybe that's one of the reasons there are a few more suicide. Because some of them get tired of the abuse, or have been put down long enough to give up on it ever changing. You have the ability to change that.

Too bad we don't have the ability to give people permanent, year-round jobs. Maybe then people wouldn't sink so low that they feel like drinking, which can lead to a few different things, including death. As it is a depressant it sometimes causes people to do things/ or get upset about things that would seem stupid to them if they were sober. Which tends to get them in trouble and they

Musk Ox Mania

Many Nomeites recall not so many years ago when the first musk ox sightings caused quite a stir. Back in the '80s the phones at the Nugget office would ring and an excited voice would proclaim, "There's a muskox behind Burmeister's dog lot ," or "There's five musk ox this side of the Roadhouse." Cars would line the road with Nomeites and their cameras. Well, now the musk ox is not so unique. In fact it is becoming a danger. We forget that a musk ox is a wild animal with a set of horns that put Fredrick the Impaler to shame. With one thrust they can gore a dog, a person or anything they perceive as a threat.

Recently as many as 70 of the shaggy longhaired beasts have made Nome their home as they hang out near the airport, Icy View and the beach. Why are they taking up residence here? Is it because of our tender and crunchy lawns and gardens? Is it because they feel safe because there are no bears to bother them or no wolves to join them for lunch? Whatever the reason, they have become a safety hazard. Nomeites need to exercise extreme caution when out hiking, biking or jogging. Musk ox are fun to watch, but best observed from a distance.

How can we encourage these magnificent wild animals to get out of town? Should we erect cardboard bear cut outs with recorded growl sounds? How about some wolf howls at night? Were the musk ox imported here to supply us with a source of red meat? If so, then we should practice some game management techniques that involve our favorite recipes for musk ox stew, roast or burgers. — N.L.M.—

BSNC feasibility study on Port Clarence released

Bering Straits Native Corporation and Crowley commissioned Northern Economics to prepare a feasibility analysis on Port Clarence as a support base. The report was released in June and states that "the project team believes oil and gas development activities are the only market segment with sufficient potential revenue to support development of Port Clarence within the next 10 years."

The purpose of the report was to find out if there is enough demand and potential uses and economic regional benefits if port facilities were constructed at Port Clarence. The report concluded that a minimum of facilities would mean the construction of a dock, a 66-man camp, gravel pads, water and wastewater installations and power generation. If oil and gas exploration activities begin again in the Chukchi and Beaufort Seas, fuel and logistic support at Port Clarence may look attractive, but larger firms use Unalaska and Dutch Harbor for support.

The report pegs preliminary capital costs for a dock, the camp and the other infrastructure between $34 million to $72 million. The report estimates operation and maintenance costs to be $1.4 million per year. The report identifies public and private funding sources. Private funding sources include commercial lenders and asset management firms. Public funding sources would be the federal Economic Development Administration, USDA or the state's Alaska Industrial Export and Development Authority. The report says, "BSNC indicates it will look first to the private sector for project funding.

As benefits to the region, the report lists potential employment and possibly lower costs of living. This however would only play out if the oil industry would select Port Clarence as a support base with a large number of staff 700 to 1,300 living there and steady oil and gas production would be a reality by 2025. "Cost of living expenses for food, fuel, and supplies might be reduced with economies of scale, after Port Clarence becomes an established support base," says the report.

"However, the team does not expect Port Clarence to significantly reduce costs due to the dispersed location of regional communities, their relative size in relation to Nome, the regional hub, and the extensive use of the current Bypass Mail Program for many goods.'

The report says that Brevig Mission and Teller could benefit from lower fuel prices, due to Port Clarence. Both communities would likely need to invest in larger storage facilities to realize these benefits.

In terms of regional benefits, the report states that a crisis could bring benefits to the region. "Port of refuge status could generate regional benefits, but spill response and emergency vessel response generate most economic activity during an event such as a spill or a vessel grounding. The increased economic activity from spill and rescue events is not predictable and depends on a rapid build-up of supplies and personnel that reflects the severity of the crisis," reads the report.

Kawerak to formulate regional Arctic shipping plan

Growing concern about regional increase in shipping traffic has spurred Kawerak Inc. to pursue grant money to organize a regional workshop event and to fund two positions that would be tasked to formulate a regional plan for the Norton Sound and Bering Strait region.

Two private foundations, the Oak Foundation and the Pew Charitable Trust, have awarded grant monies to Kawerak.

Pew Charitable Trust awarded funds for a regional two-day workshop, to which a representative from both City and tribal government of every Kawerak member community will be invited. The goal of the workshop is to identify gaps in research, knowledge, infrastructure, safety; to identify not only risks but also how residents can seize opportunities for economic improvements. The resulting report aims to shine light on concerns about subsistence use, safety and security, and how to overcome infrastructure and other gaps.

A second grant, given by the Oak Foundation funds two positions: one leadership position of a Bering Strait policy planner and a support position. The policy planner will then take the workshop report and build on it by gathering more input from the Kawerak member communities, continue research with communities and shape a community-driven plan that spells out the desires and visions of the Bering Strait region.

"This person would be the eyes and ears for the region by keeping updated on Arctic policy issues on state, federal and international levels. go to many meetings and also speak on behalf of our region," said Fos-

The workshop dates are set for September 16-17, in Nome.

Lt. Gov. Mead Treadwell visits Nome

Alaska's businesses will play a larger role in Arctic cooperation after a new organization of circumpolar business leaders commissioned by eight Arctic nations gets going this fall, Lieutenant Governor Mead Treadwell told the Alaska Chamber of Commerce during their Board of Directors meeting on Monday in Treadwell leads Alaska's participation in the Arctic Council. He said the Council sponsored an Arctic Economic Council, which will include three Alaskans to be selected by the Alaska Chamber, and other Alaskans selected by Inuit, Athabaskan, Aleut and Gwich'in groups. The first formal meeting of the group is scheduled for this fall.

"Arctic development drives Alaska's economy," said Treadwell. We seek to expand oil development offshore, fill the oil pipeline with more onshore production, and develop a natural gas pipeline and LNG project. Our largest Arctic mine, Red Dog, is expanding, and new mining could come from Northwest Arctic coal, Lost River tungsten, graphite near Teller, prospects in the Brooks Range, and gold near and offshore Nome," Treadwell said.

Nome was selected as one of the hubs to recruit a fleet of vessels to serve as platforms for the specialists. "We conducted a familiarization session with our response equipment last year and began identifying local vessels with owners interested in the program. Last week we conducted a classroom training session and had owners of five local fishing vessels plus crew participate," Melton wrote.

They have identified eight local vessels that would be appropriate platforms for spill response. "We are looking at several more," added Melton.

This week's exercise is a training session to familiarize Chadux personnel with each vessel in the fleet and to see how their response equipment works aboard those vessels. It is also meant to familiarize vessel operators and crew with basic onwater spill response tactics.

"We plan to work in open water, outside the harbor to minimize interference with regular vessel traffic," wrote Melton.

There won't be any substances put in the water. Melton commented that it is not necessary to do so. "We can tell how effective the equipment is functioning by looking at wave patterns or the amount of sea foam and debris being collected in the boom," he explained.

Harbormaster Lucas Stotts said that the Port's involvement is limited to recommending a good spot on the water to conduct the test on Wednesday and Thursday.

The VOO is also being tested in Kodiak, Whittier, Valdez, Cordova and Unalaska. Melton added that they have used vessels of opportunity for real spill responses, most recently on the Igushik River out of Dillingham last year and for the grounding of M/V Monterrey near Kodiak in 2012. Over the next year, Chadux plans to expand the Norton Sound VOO program to include at least 10 vessels.

"Usually, the responsible party is taking care of the cleanup, but we wanted to make sure that there is no danger," said Johnson.

According to the spill report, NSHC hired Bering Straits Native Corporation to conduct indoor air monitoring in the hosptial and to remove contaminated soil from around and beneath the tanks. The area of contamination is estimated to be 2,500 sf. During the spill, diesel fumes were reported inside the hospital, but none since cleanup began.

Bering Straits Development Company was contracted to clean up the spill. Workers with the company have been removing contaminated gravel from the site since Friday. As of Monday afternoon they had hauled more than 180 cubic yards of fuel-contaminated gravel off the site.

Approximately 10 cubic yards fit into one regular dump truck.

The dirty dirt is stockpiled in containment cells in Icy View. According to the company, the dirt will be treated with fertilizer, containing bacteria that eat up the contamination. However, Icy View is a residential neighborhood and an alarmed neighbor already complained about the diesel fumes wafting into his house from the stored contaminated soil.

Wesley Ghormley, a DEC inspector, arrived in Nome on Monday evening to monitor the cleanup progress and advise if further steps have to be taken. Ghormley was also to travel to Shishmaref to monitor an older fuel spill situation there.

Despite attempts to reach NSHC leadership for comment by telephone and email, no response was received by press time.

"There is almost no place you can go where you are not going to run into musk ox," said John Handeland whose dog Rufus was gored.

Nowadays, Rufus is eliminating through a reconstructed rectum after $10,000 in veterinary bills after a musk ox gored his behind.

"There is more wildlife in Nome that we can tolerate," Handeland declared.

Dr. Gunter Spreth, an anthropologist from University of Hamburg, who comes to Nome each summer to study northern cultures and has long experience with musk ox in their northern European habitats, said anyone who claims musk ox cannot be a threat to humans is 'taking a great responsibility on his shoulders.

"On the biological side, musk oxen realize dogs as wolves. The smell and sound goes together with wolves. It is in the genes of the musk ox that wolves are a danger to them. If a human is together with a dog, he is connected to that instinctive reaction," Spreth said. "I would never say that musk oxen are not dangerous to humans. Humans are connected with Musk oxen from time to time occupy East End Park, they camp behind the hospital, they settle down along the well-traveled road to the mouth of the Nome River, a popular summer fishing ground.

On summer mornings, residents have risen, grabbed a cup of coffee, parted their curtains and seen a whole herd doing an overnight in their yard.

The state Fish and Game has already set up a bow hunt near Nome, to decrease the chance of bullets zinging through the air in the populated area, according to ADF&G biologist Tony Gorn.

State Dept. of Fish and Game laws allow one bull to be taken by bow or muzzleloader in the open season from Jan. 1 to March 15 by permit only. The legal area is in GMU 22C in the "portion of the Snake River drainage downstream of the Glacier Creek confluence and including the Glacier Creek drainage, that portion of the Nome River drainage downstream of and including the Basin Creek and Shepard Creek drainages, and all drainages flowing directly to Norton Sound between the mouths of the Nome River and the Snake River," according to ADF&G regulations. Only residents are eligible for this hunt. It is a Tier II subsistence hunt with special qualifications to allow one permit per household.

Hunting is not allowed within Nome's city limits.

With the coming of winter, the musk oxen customarily move out of town to higher elevation.

Tony Gorn, wildlife biologist and currently a musk ox herder, is summoned often by Nome Police Dept. when conflict could occur between the humans and musk oxen.

Gary Samuelson had to ride herd on musk oxen milling about his house. Three weeks ago, a musk ox gored and killed their dog Bernard.

The Samuelson's had Bernard in their family since he retired from four-time Iditarod Sled Dog Race champion Jeff King's dog team. This month, Samuelson, aboard an ATV four-wheeler, had to herd about 30 musk oxen from his yard.

Musk oxen stand their ground; as a result, it is very difficult to drive musk oxen from areas.

A public announcement from Nome Police Dept. was sent out the morning of June 23:

"There is a herd of musk oxen that have been in the area near 5th Ave and Steadman Ave [smack in the middle of town]. Please use caution if you are in the area. We (NPD) and [state] Fish & Game will do our best to get them out of town and try to keep them there but they will inevitably return.'

Musk ox horns are present in both sexes, appearing in the first year and continuing to grow sideways from mid-skull until the animals reach about four years old when their horns reach maximum width. At around six years old the musk ox have 28-30 inches on bulls and about 15 inches long in cows.

They do not shed their horns.

The state Dept. of Fish and Game offers tips to help people avoid the danger of "unpleasant encounters" in "musk ox country."

- Keep dogs under control at all times in musk ox country. Musk oxen can easily kill or injure dogs. Musk oxen are very patient with people, but very impatient with dogs.
- · Musk oxen are not likely to run from you as moose and caribou do. Musk oxen may be very tolerant and allow you to get surprisingly close. However, they are powerful animals and will react if they feel threatened in their space.
- Pay attention to body language. A musk ox that has stopped feeding, walking, or resting has noticed you and may become agitated.

A stressed musk ox group may form a defensive line and face you.

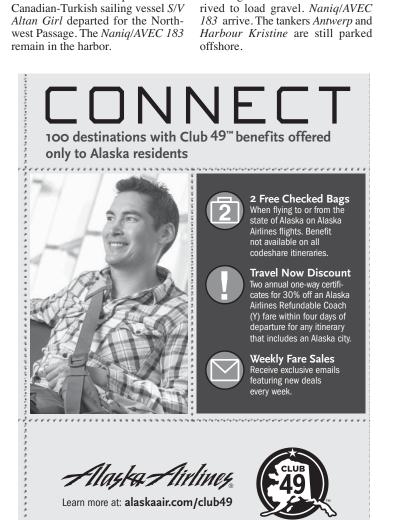

Stressed and agitated animals may begin to sway their head from side to side. Give stressed musk oxen room by retreating from the area.

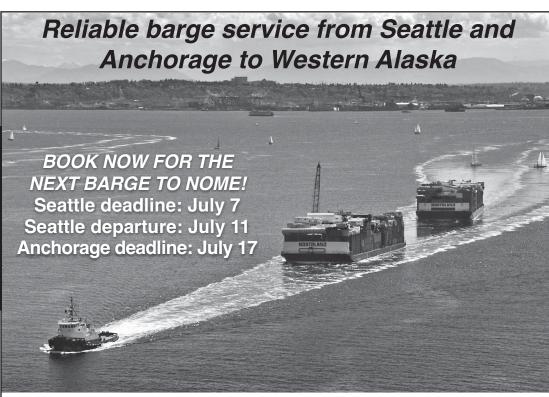

- As with any other wild animal, do not agitate or approach cows with
- Bull muskoxen are more aggressive during the fall breeding season, which takes place from August through October. Precautions should be taken to avoid disturbing males when in rut.
- · View muskoxen from at least 150 feet, give the group a wide berth, and do not box muskoxen in with people or vehicles.
- If you are charged, run; do not stand your ground.
- Muskoxen may tend to move into areas around homes and cemeteries because they offer structures that are appealing for rubbing. Structures or willows also offer muskox a sense of safety and security. Being mindful of structures or willows around your home that may entice muskoxen, may help prevent their presence in those areas.
- Do not feed muskoxen; it is both dangerous and illegal.

Meanwhile, the musk oxen continue to multiply while the solution to musk ox and people vying for the same habitat remains elusive.

COMMON SIGHT - A musk ox browsing on willows near Icy View is a common occurrence in the last few years as the animals seem to have lost all fear of humans and seek out town to roam for food and protection from predators.

Fonseca and Cromer claim victory at Gold Dust Dash

By Keith Conger

When one thinks about ways to get gold in Nome, Alaska, methods such as panning, sluicing, and dredging come to mind. But who knew that you could get gold by cross-country running?

This past Saturday the annual Gold Dust Dash race took place on the beach east of Nome. Both Joey Fonseca and Elaina Cromer won their respective divisions and took home nuggets of gold as prizes for

The Gold Dust Dash is an annual summer running event sponsored by Norton Sound Health Corporation's CAMP department and is one of the many Mid-night Sun festivities.

According to Jeff Collins, the Nome-Beltz High School Nanooks cross-country running coach, this year the race distance was changed from four miles to five kilometers (3.1 miles) to more closely match the traditional cross-country race distance and to attract more runners.

Spectators at the event saw a thrilling race unfold for overall first place between Collins and Fonseca, an intern with the Summersize Program who just finished college at Johnson and Wales University in Denver, Colorado. With several lead changes along the way, Fonseca was able to hold the most important lead, edging Collins at the finish line by two seconds with a time of 19 minutes 39 seconds.

"I thought I was going to lose him with 400 meters to go," stated Fonseca, "but I was able to have a good kick at 200 meters.'

Cromer, who is working for the UAF Reindeer Research Program and who just completed college at Cal-Poly in San Luis Obispo, California, was able to hold off Nome marathoner Crystal Tobuk to win the women's division.

Cromer ran cross-country in high school, and track at Cal Poly and has earned gold medals and ribbons before, "but I don't think I've ever won a real piece of gold."

The Nanooks running team was represented at the event.

Upcoming sophomore Wilson Hoogendorn completed the race in 21:03 and was able to outrace older sibling Oliver Hoogendorn, an upcoming senior, by 15 seconds. The pair took third and fourth place respectively.

The brothers, who compete against each other, also work well together as evidenced by their being named co-captains for the upcoming cross-country running season.

"We have a friendly rivalry," stated Wilson Hoogendorn, "sometimes we make fun bets before the race."

Upcoming sophomore Bianca Trowbridge was the lone Nanook girls runner to enter the race. Trowbridge says running on the variable conditions of the beach was a challenge with some places being pretty

Collins is proud of the runners who took part in the race. He says that they are really taking their offseason training seriously. He encourages his athletes to train on sand, but says they need to realize that racing on that surface will add about two minutes to a top runner's usual time.

CAMP presented a third gold nugget that was raffled off for all finishers of the race. Nine-year-old Nome Elementary school runner Natalie Tobuk, who Gold Dust Dash race coordinator Kendal Pike says was "by far the youngest competitor," was the lucky winner of that

CAMP stands for Chronic Care Active Management and Prevention. Its tag line is "strong bodies, healthy choices, sustainable lifestyle."

According to Pike, the Dash has been run annually for about 10

This year the race had over 30 participants. Trowbridge said that the cutest thing was "the three older ladies that were walking the race picking up beach glass.'

Swimming her way to the top is a former Nome student, Eden Gumaer of Nome who signed a National Letter of Intent to compete for the UAF Nanooks in 2014/15.

Gumaer most recently has been swimming for the Stingrays Swim Club in Fairbanks, training under the tutelage of Alaska women's UAF swimming head coach Scott Lemley.

Gumaer began her club swimming career with the Nome Northstar Swim Team, competing with them for five years before moving to Fair-

She swam in the Alaska Short Course Junior Olympics in Anchorage this spring and now will bring that high-level competition experience to the Nanooks.

She also brings academic success to the team, earning the UA Scholar's award last year.

"I think Eden Gumaer could be the biggest surprise on our team next season," said Lemley. "She and her father moved from Nome to Fairbanks last year to train with my club team in an effort to improve her freestyle skills. She swam all best times at the Alaska Spring Junior Olympic Championships, proving the move served her well.

She's a straight-A student which fits perfectly with our team's focus on academics," said Lemley.

The Alaska women swimming team announced only four new recruits to the team for next season.

All four signees are from Alaska.

CRAB:

The GHL has been announced at 382,800 pounds. To date 19 permit holders have registered for the open access fishery. The department is working with the major buyer that wants to check crab from the ongoing cooperative test crab tagging project before they commit to purchasing crab when the season opens. The commercial crab season may open as early as next week.

SALMON: Norton Sound

High and turbid waters are causing some problems getting escapement counting projects operational.

We're still early in the season. The department expects the king salmon run to be weak, and the chum salmon run to be stronger in southern Norton Sound than northern Norton Sound and early season indicators are that the pink salmon run will be strong.

The Norton Sound salmon management plan can be viewed at http://www.adfg.alaska.gov/FedAid-PDFs/RIR.3A.2014.03.pdf or for those who enjoy a Web fishing expedition, go to www.adfg.alaska.gov and click on "Commercial Fishing" right below the fishing vessel photo. Next go to the Alaska map in the right hand corner of the page and click on the northern half of Alaska and the AYK homepage comes up and then click on the Norton Sound area of the map in the right hand corner and then click on Salmon. There will be the recent fishing announcements and you can click on the Management tab to see the Norton Sound and Kotzebue salmon management plans.

Counts started on June 14. No salmon sighted through June 18. In the last 10 years the earliest king was spotted on June 21 and the earliest chum was spotted on June 16. In the

Midnight Sun shines at Nome festivities

By Diana Haecker

Under blue skies and balmy temperatures of nearly 70°F, the weather deities smiled on Nome's Midnight Sun festivities throughout the whole weekend.

Things started on Friday, June 20, when the Bering Sea Lions Club fired up their barbeque grills on Front Street. The aroma of grilled chicken drew the crowds from all four corners of Nome to buy lunch.

In the afternoon, Town Mountain, the featured guest band of the Folk Fest gave their musical debut in Nome when they played at Nome Elementary School for a "Rhythm and Dance for Kids" event. Folk Fest organizer Laura Collins said she was familiar with Town Mountain – an award-winning bluegrass band – from when she had lived in Asheville, North Carolina, near the stomping grounds of the band.

When approached by their production company to come to Nome and perform at the Midnight Sun Folk Fest, the band was excited and agreed to the gig. After their performances in Nome, they left for Anchorage to play there and in Seward, Girdwood and Talkeetna. "They said they had a blast," said Collins. "They said Nome was probably the high point of their trip to Alaska."

On solstice day, June 21, the sun reached its highest point north of the equator at 10:51 a.m. With summer officially proclaimed, Nomeites dressed in shorts and tank tops, plunging into the flurry of activities that kept them busy all day. The day kicked off with the Midnight Sun parade, led by Nome Police Chief John Papasodora and the volunteer ambulance and fire departments. PAWS of Nome showed off their well-behaved dogs, the Library kids displayed the summer reading program "Fizz, Boom, Read" by wearing bright shirts and riding a fourwheeler-pulled trailer. The Nome St. Lawrence Island dance group drummed and danced their way up Front Street. Nome Community Center promoted their work to keep Nome kids healthy and tobacco-free. The Folk Fest banner bearers and the band Town Mountain, riding on a flatbed truck, brought up the rear.

As high noon neared, a large crowd gathered on Front Street at the bank. The Society for Historical Reenactment put on yet another episode of the annual bank robbery. But this time it was different.

Phil Schobert played Louis Polet, performer Arlo Hannigan again played Wyatt Earp, Ken Shapiro acted as Richard Roe, the gang leader of outlaws. Several others played their parts in the scene of a peaceful frontier town, with young men drinking, young boys doing chores and wood work, and proper ladies gossiping at the sidelines. Then come the bad guys sauntering down Front Street, only to find out that the bank is empty and the loot is

Mosquito bites: How to avoid and treat the summer bites

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

The mosquito, one of the smallest insects, is one of the world's deadliest killers. Worldwide millions of people die every year from diseases carried by the mosquito including malaria, dengue fever, yellow fever, and encephalitis.

Fortunately, mosquito-borne diseases are rare in Alaska. Cases of malaria and encephalitis appear only sporadically in people who have returned to Alaska after being bitten by mosquitoes in highrisk parts of the world. In rural Alaska, the mosquito bite is more a source of annoyance than a source of serious medical problems.

The itch associated with a mosquito bite is actually an allergic reaction to proteins, literally digestive enzymes, injected at the time of a bite. The reaction tends to be localized and rarely lasts more than a few

In very rare cases, the mosquito bite can lead to a severe anaphylactic reaction resulting in a medical emergency causing difficulty breathing. Of course, people in this situation should seek immediate medical intervention.

Interestingly, allergic reactions to mosquito bites tend to lessen in strength over a lifetime. Adults exposed to many bites generally react with less severity than children or infants who have had only a limited number of bites. In this way, each mosquito bite is like a small allergy shot that desensitizes the body to future attacks.

Mosquitoes are not too choosy. Experts say mosquitoes are more LASKA attracted males, people FAMILY with type-O DOCTOR blood, and obese in dividuals. Conversely, there is some evidence that people who take a B-vitamin called thiamine are less attractive to mosquitoes.

Mosquitoes are also attracted to exhaled carbon dioxide, certain perfumes, and body heat. Mosquito repellents come in three forms: topical repellants, fabric repellents, and physical barriers. Topical repellents work by interfering with the ability of a mosquito to recognize open skin. DEET in concentrations up to 35 percent may be used on anyone over two months old. In general, use the lowest concentration needed for the duration of possible exposure. DEET 10 percent will last about two hours. DEET should not be applied to the hands of children who may transfer the chemical to sensitive tissue in the eves or mouth. Caution should be used durchildren don't deserve it either. You are supposed to protect them. They ing application because DEET may degrade certain plastics and fabrics.

A newer repellent called Picaridin is nearly odorless and better tolerated by people who react poorly to DEET. Picaridin is just as effective as DEET at similar doses.

Oil of Lemon Eucalyptus is comparable to DEET at low concentrations but should not be used on children under three years old because is has a strong sedating effect and has been associated with adverse effects in young children.

Products containing Permethrin are available for treating physical barriers like clothing, shoes, tents, and bed nets. Topical permethrin should not be applied directly to the skin to repel mosquitoes (though it is sometimes prescribed to treat an infestation of lice or scabies).

If prevention fails, bites may be treated with hydrocortisone cream or calamine lotion to ease the itch. Experts from the Mayo Clinic describe a homemade topical paste that can be made by mixing equal parts water and powdered meat tenderizer. Another old dermatology trick is to apply very warm water (hot enough to feel uncomfortable but not hot enough to burn the skin) to the bite for a few seconds. Some people find the opposite approach works better and recommend applying ice to the affected area to reduce inflammation.

Stronger reactions can be treated with an antihistamine like diphenhydramine (Benadryl), chlorpheniramine maleate (Chlor-Trimeton, Actifed), loratadine (Claritin) or cetirizine (Zyrtec).

Goldsmith report badly flawed

The group Vote Yes! Repeal The Giveaway today lauded Dr. Mark Myers' critical analysis, which rebuts a report by UAA's Scott Goldsmith reviewing oil tax alternatives.

Statewide media funded largely by the beneficiaries of Senate Bill 21, have been trying to influence Alaska voters by touting the Goldsmith report, which was underwritten by a bank supporting

Dr. Myers, a scientist with more than 30 years experience on Alaska oil and gas issues, including serving as director of Alaska's Division of Oil and Gas, evaluated the work of Goldsmith and found his report to be riddled with flaws in its approach. He concludes that the public should disregard the Goldsmith report.

Dr. Myers writes: "As former director of the United States Geological Survey, one of the country's largest scientific research organizations, I ensured that research reports were subject to standard procedural and substantive tests and independent review prior to release.

"Goldsmith's analysis fails these, and has significant problems and weaknesses that undermine his conclusions. It is vitally important for the voters in August to understand that his report does not provide a relevant and useful factual basis to compare the new and old systems.'

Among the many specific problems with the report, Myers notes that Goldsmith, "...did not submit his work for peer review prior to publication." "Has not published his models..." and, "The analysis relies on public cost data from the Department of Revenue, submitted by producers but not audited by the agency. It is potentially a garbage-in garbage-out problem in modeling."

After his detailed analysis, Myers concludes: "Due to the significant weaknesses in Dr. Goldsmith's report, I believe it doesn't provide an authoritative analysis of the differences between the previous and current tax systems. I urge the public to disregard the report until or unless it undergoes serious technical or peer

Dirk Nelson, who volunteers as coordinator for the Interior effort of the Stop the Giveaway, Vote Yes on Prop1 Inc., says, "Things are going well. We're at all the local events, talking to folks about the issues and reminding them to vote Yes on 1. I think Alaskans are seeing through the slick ad campaign being run by three of the richest corporations in the world."

Vic Fischer, chair of Vote Yes! Repeal the Giveaway, expressed optimism, saying: "This second battle for statehood is in full swing. We are spending every available moment contacting our voters and ensuring they will show up at the polls on August 19th. We don't have the $10 million campaign war chest on our side, but we've got Alaskans speaking to their neighbors and friends about the issue. That's what will win this race.'

Alaskans will have the opportunity to vote on the repeal of Senate Bill 21 at the August 19th primary

Arlene Jane Ranstead

Arlene Jane Ranstead, 74, died June 14, 2014 in Fairbanks, after a long illness. She was born in the small village of Teller on November 15, 1939. Her family moved to Nome in 1947, and it became the place they called home. During high school she worked to save enough money to put herself through business school.

After finishing Kinman Business College in Spokane, Washington, she returned to Nome and worked for the Alaska Court System. She started as a clerk and worked her way up to the position of magistrate. In 1966 she married Dale H.

Ranstead and moved to Fairbanks where they raised their two children. Arlene continued to work for the Alaska Court System in Fairbanks for many years while supporting her husband's flying career.

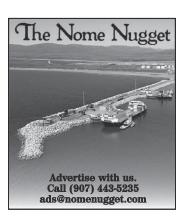

In recent years, Arlene was a steady fixture at GNC in the Bentley Mall and Shoppers Forum. She lived a healthy, active lifestyle, completing many local 5K and 10Ks, the Equinox and enjoyed hiking Angel Rocks and Granite Tors. She loved watching old movies, picking blueberries and cranberries, tending to her exotic plants, and she had an incredible memory for historical facts and baking and her friends and family knew her for her exemplary kitchen skills. For many years Arlene was known as "the cake lady" around town. She was a very talented cake decorator and made hundreds of wedding and birthday cakes. She prided herself on not only the fact that they were beautiful, but that they tasted good too.

Her real passions were cooking

She loved her Springer spaniels and especially loved her grand dogs.

Arlene is survived by her daughter, Audrey Ranstead; son, Dean Ranstead; sister, Janet Abbe; nephew, Ronnie Abbe; his wife, Teresa; and their son, Arlene's great nephew, Roman. She was preceded in death by her husband, Dale H. Ranstead and her brothers, Jack and Bill Muller. A celebration of her life will be held later this summer.

much ado, Schobert fessed up that he hid the loot. The good judge, played by real life judge Tim Dooley, ruled that the loot is to be held by the children of Nome in trust. This judgment couldn't stand; the bad guys and the good guys went at it with the traditional shoot-out. While dramatically dying, Roe's (aka Shapiro's) last words were: "Don't let them take the loot"

A shower of candy was next and the kids dove in to claim their candy.

The Rotarians then invited all to the annual Polar Bear Swim, which had a record showing due to Rivieralike weather. To the signal of Danielle Slingsby, hundreds rushed into the Bering Sea and while some rushed even faster out of the frigid ocean, some kids and even adults lounging on a couple of oversized floating swans, stayed for a long while. Beach towels were spread out everywhere and the fragrance of suntan lotion was in the air.

Folks had just enough time to dry off and head to the Folk Fest main stage event, where local artists performed from 4 p.m. until the song "Good Night, Irene" sounded the end of the event at 8 p.m. Town Mountain then performed at the Bering Sea Restaurant.

No solstice is complete without the Bering Sea Lions Club Nome River Raft Race. The rules never change: the raft must be homemade and have at least four crewmembers. When crossing the finish line at Dexter, all crewmembers must be entirely wet.

The undefeated champions since 1991, were and still are the Howlin' Dawgs, in memory of Truman Johnson, led by Steve Longley with a crew of Kyle Griesmann, Landis Bjorgen and Frank Krier. Despite a five-minute late start, they finished at 3:05 p.m. with an elapsed time of two hours and five minutes.

The second team, hot on their heels was the Wild West Dang Nugget, consisting of captain Amber Ryan and Zanai Hall. They won second place for finishing at 3:10 p.m., only five minutes after the Howlin' Dawgs.

And then there were hours of nothing. Not until 5:05 p.m. did Q Trucking D-69ers under captain Charley Reader cross the finish line to claim third place.

The other two registered rafts did not make it to the finish line after the checkers called it quits at 5:30 p.m. Missing in action were SS Jacob I captained by Seijiro Heck & crew, and the Green Machine, captained by Jessie Miller, and her crew of four.

Fire engine repair contract heats Council debate

By Sandra L. Medearis

A contract to get Nome's emergency vehicles repaired may have kindled a fire to consume City attorney fees when the Nome Common Council refused to award the work to the lowest bidder after a protest from another bidder and land zone issues

The Council has turned down City Manager Josie Bahnke's recommendation on the contract award based on a low bid and other evaluations twice so far.

A bid opening June 5 showed that Rolland Trowbridge offered to do the work for $10 an hour less than another bidder, for $85 an hour compared to $95 an hour with wrecker service coming in the same—$25 for a call out and $2.50 per mile.

Nome Machine Works, owned by Nome Volunteer Fire Dept. Chief Matt Johnson, cast the higher bid for the work.

The City administration drew up a resolution awarding the contract on light duty and emergency vehicle and equipment repair and service to Trowbridge, but pulled it out of the June 10 meeting packet before the vote, based on a bid protest filed by

Kawerak granted extension to get funding

By Sandra Medearis

Kawerak, Inc. employees left a recent Council meeting happy, with a year's extension to get money for the Beringia Center with the help from the City of Nome.

The culture center is planned for the Richard Foster Building going up at the north end of Steadman Street. The City of Nome has $16 million and change for the building; estimates run at around $19 million and change for completion of a building to wrap together the Carrie M. McLain Museum, Kegoyah Kozga Library and the Beringia Science and Cultural Center, a tribal museum.

Kawerak's obligation to lease a portion of the Richard Foster Building for the program was subject to a requirement that Kawerak and City of Nome to have obtained all funds necessary for construction of the building by July 1. Kawerak signed the lease on Dec. 20 last year.

The lease agreement calls for Kawerak as a tenant, to pay City of Nome as a landlord, $115,500 per year, which the City needs to offset operating costs for the building.

A legislative grant for $1.6 million did not show up, nor did a grant for $1.3 million from the Rasmusen Foundation.

The $1.6 million to help fund library space and free up construction funds for Beringia Center's 3,300 sq. feet did not arrive from Juneau after the legislature chose not to fund any library programs.

However, according to City Manager Josie Bahnke, the Rasmuson

Foundation has budged on their original no answer, saying the money could come if the remainder of the funding had been secured. She urged the Council to approve a resolution amending the lease agreement with Kawerak to give more time to find

The Council tossed around the likelihood of a year's grace producing any more funds as Kawerak and members of the public lobbied the benefits of putting Native history and culture from the Bering Strait region on display at the Richard Foster Building.

"We are tenants of the building and partners with the City as fund raisers," Amy Russell -Jamgochian told the Council. "We have put

Communities ponder pros and cons of Road to Ambler

By Diana Haecker

Community leaders from the Doyon and NANA regions gathered for a two-day AIDEA sponsored meeting in Kotzebue to discuss a proposed industrial road to access the Ambler Mining District from Alaska's interior.

While no substantially new information was presented on the proposed project, the gathering was more about gauging attitudes in favor or against the project.

Most community leaders agreed on the desire to make wise decisions for the future of their children, grandchildren and future genera-

Sally Custer of Shungnak summarized the collective sentiment when she stated that she was there on behalf of her grandchildren. "I hope to do right by them," she said.

Just what the desired future would look like remained to be read between the lines.

Does a bright future mean the status quo of undisturbed wilderness and subsistence resources not spoiled by development? Or does economic opportunity and jobs at a possible mine in the Ambler Mining District constitute a bright future for the region's children? Does a happy medium exist?

Those questions were not settled during last week's meeting hosted by the Alaska Industrial Development and Export Authority, AIDEA for

The consensus was to work together on answering those questions, finding a compromise if one must be reached and to support an Environmental Impact Statement process that is to begin this summer.

Some called the meeting historical because it brought residents from NANA region and Doyon region together to begin a discussion that will mostly likely last for years to come.

AIDEA invited representatives from tribal and city governments from Bettles, Huslia, Hughes, Alatna, Evansville, Ambler, Kobuk, Shungnak, members of the Northwest Arctic Borough Assembly and NANA and Maniilaq representatives

Greetings Ms McGuire-You hit the nail on the head with your June 19 Keeping Secrets Editorial. It's important that DNR is called out on their sham review process by area residents, as state bureaucrats must acknowledge their constituents extend beyond the mining industry.

I'm a retired 30 year employee of the DNR land section and observed close-up the special treatment afforded to miners. This special treatment is especially egregious in regards to public notice and written analysis of the impacts from mining. Lack of bonds and insurance are also areas of concern.

As you've noted inadequate public notice is what most affects local residents. Posting on "obscure government websites" clearly does not constitute true public notice regardless of state rules, DNR even requires submittal of a form with an original signature before they'll provide copies of mining applications. Not easily done from Teller or Brevig Mission.

I applaud your efforts and encourage you to keep the heat on DNR, as election years are an excellent opportunity to enact change. Best Wishes

Mike Sullivan Anchorage, AK

"Where do they find the time?"

Half of the time that any politician spends in public office these days, regardless of their party affiliation, is spent in doing everything within their power to vilify their political opposition. It apparently makes no difference to them whether something is worthwhile or not, if the other faction is for it, they are against

The other half of most politicians' tenure in office is spent in running for re-election, and this by claiming accomplishments that are often more fiction than fact, more wishful thinking than reality!

So I ask you, does it come as any real surprise that most of those who infest the halls of government accomplish little of any real value? What is surprising, however, is the fact that so many of us continue to tolerate this ongoing kick in the groin, instead of demanding that our government function on behalf of all in America, equally and fairly,

Where do they find the time indeed? The only logical answer is: "They do not!"

H. Rick Tavares Campo, California,

Dear Editor:

Once again the Snake River fishing and recreation area is taken over

No one comes here to fish anymore — kids adults families subsistence boats and trailers all gone. This year the City has failed to place a Porta Potty so men are openly exposing themselves urinating on the ground and dumping human waste in the river. Elders, adults, families with children used to stand and fish this entire area.

Last year the harbormaster put up barricades and signs listing this as a tow away zone and designated recreation area. This year nothing— one guy shows up under the excuse we need to do repairs and the rest just pile on throwing their anchors right in the child play area. The kids could not fish from this spot yesterday they had to wade out in their boots in the shallows to the left to cast their lines

Note the tire tracks; some are just too lazy to park their trucks and trailers in the parking area. Others are just angry at the lack of launch area due to dredges drifting over the ramp area. Before the sand was delivered to protect the kids, drivers drove on purpose to run over children's toys and possessions.

Last year we put up a $500 tent to try to secure the area for kids. The tent was purposely driven over and ruined. This year we had sand delivered since the kids were out playing in sand and almost being run over by trucks and trailers in a big hurry to launch. One problem is the dredges are docking on both sides of the boat launch area unattended and they drift right over the ramp area so boat users are forced to launch any way they can.

People drive with truck and trailer right over kids' play area. This year many just do not understand about where to anchor or have knowledge of the commercial anchorage on other side of river. This still presents the lack of access for traditional use of this Snake River spot and presents a danger to the children who play and fish here.

Why was all the money spent on dredging a west side commercial anchorage for the dredges if the City is not going to enforce moving dredges to the commercial side and return the east side Prospect Place Snake River to its original beauty and community fishing area.

Where's the meeting? What meeting? Do we mean the re-scheduled postponed cancelled regular meeting that will meet at noon instead of the 7 p.m. or 7:30 p.m. rescheduled work session before the rescheduled regular meeting, but on Tuesday instead of Monday? Did City Hall forget to tell us something?

When candidates make a commitment to run for office they assume the responsibility to attend and conduct meetings on a regular scheduled basis. In Nome our elected officials seem to be willy-nilly about regular meetings. Any excuse to postpone is okey-dokey. Heck, no one attends the meetings anyway. If the meeting dates are changed, then there is more time to keep the public in the dark and more time to finagle. Why should the public trust such a loose arrangement? Why are we allowing such footloose and fancy-free treatment of pubic

Nomeites, we need to hold public officials' feet to the fire, not only on the city level, but also at the state level. We should never have to tolerate trying to attend a meeting that was cancelled without adequate warning and for a flimsy excuse. However, we let officials play the old nutshell game by not being watchdogs and by not attending meetings - city council, utilities, school board, port, planning and museum commissions. -N.L.M.-

GOLD DREDGES— Harbormaster Lucas Stotts reports that, so far, a total of 70 gold dredges are registered at the Nome Small Boat Harbor. On windy days, the smaller dredges park at the mouth of the Snake River.

The Dock Walk

Sunny skies but brisk winds kept the gold dredge fleet from operating in full force outside of Nome last

However, Harbormaster Lucas Stotts had a busy schedule with barges, tugs and fishing vessels coming and going out of the Nome Small Boat Harbor and the Port of Nome.

On June 24, Vitus Marine's vessel Naniq departed. Bering Pacific's tug and barge Gretchen H/Seabeck departed after loading gravel. Motor Tanker Antwerp departed from offshore and headed South.

On June 25, Northland Services' vessels Nunaniq and Greta arrived and departed with village freight. Brice Marine's landing craft and barge Sam B/LAB arrived and loaded

On June 26, the fishing tender Alaskan Legacy arrived and began hauling crab for Norton Sound Seafood Products

The cruise ship Hanseatic arrived at the docks for the night. Brice Marine's Sam B/LAB departed and the Gretchen H/Seabeck returned to Nome to load another load of gravel.

On June 27, the cruise ship Hanseatic departed to Vancouver. The Gretchen H/Seabeck departed. Northland Service's landing craft Greta landed and departed again.

On June 28, Ridge Construction's Devon/BC151 arrived to drop off and load equipment.

On June 29, the research vessel Norseman II arrived. The Gretchen H/Seabeck arrived to load more gravel. Northland Services' landing craft Sam Taalak and the Nunania arrived to load village freight.

The Devon/BC151 departed. Alaska Logistics had the Seahawk/Madison Rose arrive for village freight.

On June 30, the research vessel Norseman II departed to conduct a research cruise in the North.

Delta Western brought in the Pacific Challenger/DBL 79 to discharge fuel for Bonanza Fuel Inc. The Gretchen H/Seabeck departed after loading up gravel. The Sam B/Lab loaded rock at Cape Nome. Alaska Logistics' Seahawk/Madison Rose departed.

Stotts reports 70 permitted gold dredges and 16 fishing vessels. He added that five to 10 more dredges and four to six more fishing boats have to be tracked down to be registered with the harbor office. A new jackup rig and mechanical dredge operating under the name Arctic Sea Mining is currently parked at the small boat harbor docks. It is owned by Ken Kerr, who operated a surf crawler and two dredges in Nome for several years.

• Fire engine repair

the adequacy of Trowbridge's expertise and shop size to work on the costly fire engine and other equipment were filed as fire chief, not as owner of Nome Machine Works, Johnson said in his protest letter.

"What does he know about heavy duty vehicles, diesel engines, fire pumps, fire suppression foam systems, pressure relief systems, airbrake systems, hydraulic systems, aerial ladder and snorkel platform operations and repairs, shoreline electrical systems, on-board air and electrical charge systems? Just to name a few," Johnson asked in his letter to City Manager Josie Bahnke. "Emergency response vehicles are very complicated pieces of equipment, they are not the same as working on a light duty pickup truck."

Johnson also noted that Trowbridge's shop did not have the area in which to accommodate the $700,000 ladder truck.

In the week following the June 10 meeting, Trowbridge showed Bahnke he was certification-heavy, to her satisfaction. His credentials included working on tank trucks, he said in an e-mail concerning his qualifications.

Trowbridge submitted his mechanic certifications and Commercial Driver's License documentation to Bahnke. He had an arrangement with Alaska Cab Garage, a larger facility for use to work on large equipment, Trowbridge said in the e-mail to Bahnke.

She evaluated his claims, she said. She then put the resolution awarding the contract to Trowbridge as lowest bidder back into the Council work packet to be approved at the June 25 Council meeting.

Lo and behold! When the contract with Trowbridge came up for a vote of approval, Councilman Stan Andersen and Councilman Tom Sparks came back with a haymaker, announcing that Trowbridge's operation of a vehicle repair shop, at 303 West C, violated the City's zoning codes and therefore his bid was disqualified per requirements spelled out in the bid package. The address of the garage leased from the Perkins family is in a General Use Zone. Nome's 2008 zoning law specifically prohibits vehicle repair shops in General Use zones. A new law cannot deal out a land use already existing before the new law, because the existing nonconforming use is "grandfathered" in until the use lapse for two years. In that case, the grandfather protection expires, or sunsets.

The Council could approve the contract with Trowbridge contingent on approval of the shop site by the Nome Planning Commission that rules on land use cases, Bahnke suggested.

The Council voted unanimously against approving a contract with Trowbridge.

The contract with Nome Machine Works expired on June 24, according to City records. Currently, City Manager Josie Bahnke can negotiate on the open market for repairs pending a clarification of the contract award, and the granting of nonconforming use to Trowbridge's vehicle shop business, according to Bahnke and City Clerk Tom Moran. No variance is available to Trowbridge to allow an auto repair shop in a general use area, according to Charlie Weiss, head of the Nome Planning Commission. But the land use status goes with the address, meaning grandfather rights do not expire if the business changes hands, as long as the nonconforming use continues.

The question now is whether Trowbridge can show there has been no two-year lapse during which time the property was not used for vehicle maintenance and repair activities. "There were questions about his qualifications. He proved his competence. At the last minute an issue arose concerning whether Trowbridge could operate an auto shop in that zone," Moran said. "Initially it appeared the nonconforming use had lapsed, but other factors have come to light that need the city attorney's consideration."

The continual user does not have to sell services or be a business, Moran said. "As long as Trowbridge can prove the property is grandfathered in through continual use as a place for vehicle service and repair, he is in, but the burden is on the user." Moran added.

The City had a zoning law to get away from having repair shops in residential areas, Andersen said. And "I want to stick with somebody who is known. I'd like to see him [Trowbridge] in business for a year before I award a contract," Andersen said.

ZONING VIOLATION?— Trinity Sails and Repair vehicle repair on West C Street violates the General Use zone, which prohibits vehicle repair shops according to a 2008 City of Nome zoning law, Nome Common Council members say. Therefore they voted down a resolution awarding owner Rolland Trowbridge a contract as lowest bidder to service and repair emergency vehicles and light duty equipment.

for 26 years and had paid sales tax to the City for two years, he said. The zoning issue was a straw argument, he said. State records show a business license for Trinity Sails and Repair dating from October 2011, with Trowbridge named as sole propri-

"It's the old boys' network in action. It's a game. This was not right," Trowbridge said following the no vote June 25.

"I agree with you," Andersen said. "The process stinks."

Trowbridge said June 26 that he would take the zoning issue to the Nome Planning Commission and follow procedures. Nome Gold has used the shop in recent years.

The grandfather right had expired and was unavailable to Trowbridge under his lease, some Council members said; the contract should go to the next lowest bidder, Nome Machine Works. Other Council members voiced the belief that Bahnke as City manager must use her discretion in selecting a company to perform service and maintenance on the City's emergency vehicles, including the $700,000 fire engine, and other light duty vehicles.

Port commission tables decision to be on harbor safety committee

By Sandra L. Medearis

Port of Nome commissioners heard from City Manager Josie Bahnke that a middle dock project may receive an additional $1 million for the harbor improvement.

The middle dock will go between the existing two cells on the Nome Causeway to accommodate more and larger ships, with the result that waiting time for a chance to load and unload would be reduced.

Preparation work is already underway.

"I was contacted by U.S. Economic Development Administration," said Josie Bahnke.

They asked if Nome could use another million for the project.

"Joy [Joy Baker, port project director] and I said 'sure, of course," Bahnke reported. "We've got two proposals out there —one for enhancements to the project, like communications, utilities for middle dock, and alternatively, looking to put that funding towards the project balance, essentially freeing up some money for other projects.

Port administrators haven't heard further, Bahnke told the port panel at its June 26 meeting.

In other business, Bahnke told commissioners that the City administration had a meeting with state Dept. of Natural Resources in June when they came to Nome for an "offshore mining pow wow," along with Nome Eskimo Community, Sitnasuak, Native Corp., Kawerak, Inc., and Bering Straits Native Corp.

"We had a pretty frank discussion with them about their permitting process and monitoring, and also with other issues like infrastructure and tax," Bahnke reported. "The outcome of the meeting was the need to document and to put forth a request to the commissioner of DNR to reach some sort of agreement that is mutually beneficial to the community, the City and the state.

"Some of those things could be additional staffing, providing additional services and mainly just to outline what the City is going to do and what's being expected of DNR,"

Commissioners voted to table serious discussion of participation in a harbor safety committee, an advisory group, pending more information.

Baker, harbor project director, announced a wish to go to a meeting scheduled by U.S. Coast Guard in Anchorage in late August for more information.

Nome's Mayor Denise Michels received an invitation from Charlotte Brower, Mayor of North Slope Borough to join with the borough and Kotzebue in forming a Harbor Safety Committee "to help guide policies for safe and environmentally sound operations in the Arctic and along our coastline.

Port Commissioner Charlie Lean was the first to address the idea.

"I'm in agreement with the notion that 'united we stand, divided we fall, but this talks about local harbor authorities, and in our case, that authority extends out no more than three miles. Furthermore, the Bering Strait is not state water, nor U.S. water; it is international water and an international conduit for transportation," Lean said.

"I think there is real merit in having consensus from Alaskans saying how that should be managed, but I think this is the wrong tool for that job. I would be very interested in getting some more information on how far that authority would extend.

"If you're talking about California where they have the same three-mile limit we do, but they have internal waters—San Francisco Bay or Port of San Diego. They can work with this model but we don't have any jurisdiction in Bering Strait. We have opinions and interests, but we don't have jurisdiction so to combine with this body, sharing the management of the Nome Port with Barrow and Kotzebue, just as we would share their management authority in their hometown—that seems less productive to me."

Baker spoke up.

"I think the idea is not to focus on just what is in the jurisdiction," Baker responded, attending by telephone.

"According to the Coast Guard, they would be looking for input from these bodies from a regional perspective. They're the ones with the authority to implement the regulations based on the recommended guidelines. They don't have all the local knowledge."

"I don't want to reject it out of hand, but like I said, I don't believe even the Coast Guard has the authority to regulate the Bering Strait, Lean responded. "We certainly want to be in concurrence with our opinion and their opinion."

Commissioner Iura Leahu equated a harbor safety committee to a port authority.

Baker thought the area too broad to develop a port authority from Barrow to Kotzebue.

She thought that Port of Nome should stand alone, rather than being a part of a port authority encompassing Cape Nome, Port Clarence, Port of Nome and Brevig Mission and "It would be a joining of several of the management personnel to manage all three facilities as a group. I don't like the idea of that" Baker said.

Leahu had a question.

"I was just wondering who else would take the advice of the harbor safety committee," Leahu said. "Where is the authority going to come from as far as the committee is concerned, wondering whether the Coast Guard or any agency would take advice from a pretty localized

'Several of us have voiced our opinions but we're a little foggy on the intent. More information would be good," Lean said, wrapping up the discussion.

With musk ox roaming on every front this summer, they were bound to come up at the Port of Nome Commission.

Bahnke presented a report:

"There's been a herd of about 50 musk ox over in the port road area that has been causing a lot of heart-break over there," she said. "I've been working with state Dept. of Fish and Game to come up with a plan at the cemetery, working with

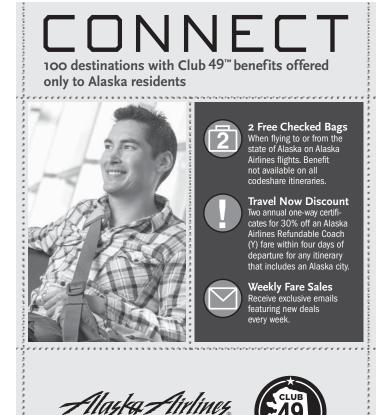

Tony Gorn just as a pilot project to use bear urine around the cemetery as a way to deter the musk ox from entering the cemetery. We're taking that idea over to the port area and putting it on the site over there behind the power plant just to seestay tuned.'

$84,533 into the budget to pay for a portion of design for our part of the design in the facility.'

Kawerak collected $292 to make and made trips down to Juneau to testify on behalf of the $1.6 million sought from legislature, Russell-Jamgochian said.

We are a nonprofit and we don't have deep pockets like a for profit would. We have avenues to fund raise that wouldn't be available to the City. We're approaching this as a public-private partnership.

Brian Meissner, with architects ECI/Hyer gave an update on the building, saying that site work had started with a target for completion in mid-September. Other materials are in shop drawing review before the firm's engineers. ASRC SKW has been awarded the preconstruction services contract. Part of their obligation was to review the material procurement packages, Meissner told the Council. Because part of it s contract was to take control of the materials in Seattle and get them to

'There is a clock ticking on the procurement packages with the first of them to hit the August barge, and the last of them is to hit the September barge, Meissner said.

In this dimension, the total project costs if we strip out the exhibits and high density storage and don't award the tenancy to Kawerak is $16 million."

The firm had been meeting with SKW weekly on value engineering opportunities and expected soon to isolate where the opportunities lay, according to Meissner, who said it was tough to find more than $100,000 to $200,000 in savings.

"Once we go past that threshold we start cutting scope and cutting quality pretty deeply," he said. "Because we already have the structural package procured, we can't save much money by carving out parts of the building.'

"I'll file a lawsuit for misuse of funds if we use a dime of taxpayer money to bring it up to $19 million," Councilman Stan Andersen declared. The current shortfall is $3.2 million.

The City administration and Kawerak said they had a plan to complete funding, but that details could not be revealed. She expected to hear soon from Rasmuson Foundation whether they would provide top-off funding after other funds had been secured.

Speaking as a private citizen, she said, Sue Steinacher during public comment said it was important economically to have Kawerak in the RFB, and important to health and social welfare of Native people.

The Council passed the resolution extending the time period to secure funding by one year until July 1 next

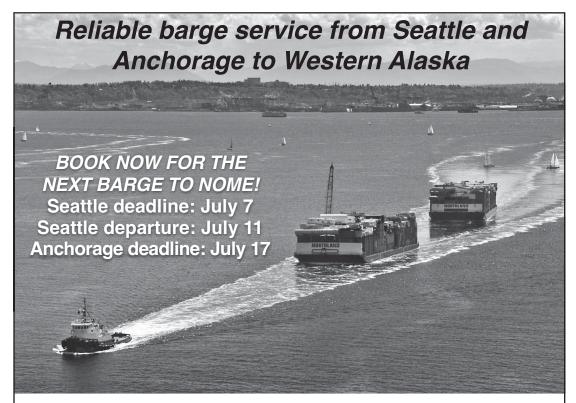

In other business, the Council voted into first reading an ordinance increasing the rate of tax on sales of alcohol and tobacco from the current 5 percent to 8 percent.

The Council was unable to discuss or hear public comment until the second reading of the ordinance at the next regular meeting.

If the Council adopts the ordinance, the issue will go before the voters at the Oct. 7 municipal elec-

While in the mood to raise money to match a budget shortfall, the Council also voted "yes" to introduce a measure to increase sales tax by one percent during the months of June, July and August.

That question, too, would come before the voters in October.

NETWORKING — Northwest Arctic Borough Mayor Reggie Joule and NovaCopper CEO and President Rick Van Nieuwenhuyse converse before the start of the Ambler Mining District Industrial Access Road Project Leadership meeting that took place in Kotzebue from June 25 to June 26.

Road to Ambler

from Kotzebue.

Also present was NovaCopper President and CEO Rick Van Nieuwenhuyse. NovaCopper's Upper Kobuk Mineral projects are located in the Ambler Mining District, driving the need for the proposed access road.

The villages of Kiana, Noorvik and Selawik were not invited. AIDEA spokesman Karsten Rodvik said the gathering was meant to include only those immediate stakeholders who live along the proposed transportation corridor. The owner of a wilderness lodge that would be only eight miles away from the road was also not on the invitee list. Representatives from Allakaket protested the meeting because they disagreed with the process. The meeting was by invitation only and was not advertised.

AIDEAs' tribal consultant Joy Huntington said at the beginning that the meeting took place because village representatives asked for it. "We don't just want a dialogue, we really want relationships established here," Huntington said.

There were plenty of jokes going around alluding to the days when the Athabascan Indians were raiding Eskimo villages. One said, "we can talk as long as you don't come and take our women" or "That road will make it easier to raid Indian country, making high tech warfare with bow and arrows."

Be nice to each other

Northwest Arctic Borough Mayor Reggie Joule set the tone and asked for civility and respect. "It's OK to disagree as long as we are respectful of each other's view," Joule said. "Whether you are for this or not, be at the table and be involved in the process."

Susan Bell, the commissioner for the Alaska Dept. of Commerce, Community and Economic Development and a board member of AIDEA addressed the crowd. She stated that the DCCED is always looking for ways to create a healthy economy, clearly supporting the road.

Northwest Arctic Borough Assembly President Walter Sampson reminded the gathering how difficult times were when ANCSA came about and a nomadic, subsistence based culture had to grow up real fast and learn to be successful running a regional corporation and participating in the business world. "We got the message from shareholders to create an opportunity so that they can work. Subsistence was our top priority, but we had to find a source of income for our shareholders." NANA selected 77,000 acres of land they knew had value, including the present Red Dog mine. "It took 13 years to mull Red Dog," Sampson said.

He said that countless meetings and discussions were held. They knew nothing about mining and needed to find a partner. "That was something this region had to go through. If it wasn't for all 11 villages coming together, it could've been a hard sell," he said.

Encouraged by the process that seemed successful for Red Dog mine, Sampson said that the opportunity to be heard would come.

The road

AIDEA Infrastructure Specialist John Springsteen briefly updated the gathering on the facts. The purpose of the road is to provide access to potential mines, which aligns with AIDEA's mission to provide economic development and jobs for Alaska. The Dept. of Transportation's Road to Resources division began baseline studies on a possible transportation corridor in 2010.

The project was turned over to AIDEA in 2013. This changed the nature of the road insofar as it wasn't going to be built with public money in times when state funds are hard to come by. Not being built by the DOT also changed the project from being a public road to a one-lane industrial road, which will be paid for by investors or bonds.

The AIDEA board has approved going forward with the project and submitting applications to begin the EIS process this summer. It has not been decided yet which federal agency will take the lead in the EIS process. Usually, it is the Army Corps of Engineers. The EIS will take approximately three to four years to complete.

Joy Huntington said that one of the main reasons to shift the project from DOT to AIDEA was a major concern of Koyukuk and Kobuk river villages about the possility that outside hunters and fishers would travel the road and compete with subsistence users for fish and game. She pointed out that many still harbor concerns, pointing towards the fact that the Dalton Highway also started out as a private industrial road and was eventually opened up to the

The Dalton Hwy. was constructed on a public right-of-way and therefore the DOT commissioner made the decision to open it to the public because state funds were used to maintain and operate it. The Ambler road corridor would be different since it would not be built on public right-of-ways. "It is similar to the Red Dog mine road," Huntington said. "We pay construction, operation and maintenance and reclamation and the users will pay a user that were brought up in past meetings. In addition to the obvious fear of impacts on subsistence resources such as fish and the Western Arctic Caribou herd, people were concerned about the process and the trickle rather than flow of information.

In Section 201, ANILCA provides for a surface transportation right-ofway from the Dalton Highway to the Ambler Mining District through the Gates of the Arctic National Park Service lands. Title eight of the same law recognizes the importance of subsistence and forces in the National Environmental Protection Act process, which governs the EIS process, to take a look at the impacts of the project on subsistence. This makes for a long, thorough process, rich in opportunity to provide input, said AIDEA's contractor Dowl HKM project manager Maryellen Tuttle.

Huntington argued that subsistence concerns cannot be responded to right now, but that subsistence resources are being studied. ADF&G was funded to conduct the needed research. As for transparency, she said, 'We don't have the federal government-to-government consultation mandate, but we like to hear from tribal governments. You can expect that to be raised a few notches as a federal agency takes over for the EIS," Huntington said.

Process and lessons learned

She added that, so far, 29 meetings with NANA and Doyon communities have been held, but that some questions raised cannot be answered until after the EIS has been completed.

However, this was a red flag for Trustees for Alaska Executive Director Victoria Clark, who attended as an observer for the non-profit environmental law firm. Clark said that in her observation, people were not particularly free with what their real atmosphere of the meeting did not portray a realistic picture of how deep opposition to the road runs. "Once they begin the EIS process and spend a lot of money, it's really hard to stop the momentum," Clark said after the meeting.

Clark draws from her experience on litigating against the Army Corps of Engineers in the case of Bering Straits Citizens for Responsible Resource Development vs. the Corps of Engineers over the lack of an EIS done for NovaGold's Rock Creek mine in Nome. She summarized lessons learned from that lawsuit, say-

DIFFICULT DECISIONS (top)— The complexity of issues needs to be fully understood when making decisions on the impacts a road could have on the lives of people living in upper Kobuk valley and beyond. The gravity of the situation wasn't lost on June Walker of the Doyon community Hughes, Shield Downey of Ambler and Gary Hanchett, Mayor of Bettles.

ing, "People need to participate early and be very vocal of what their concerns are."

Former NovaGold CEO and President Rick Van Nieuwenhuyse, now appointed CEO and President of NovaGold spin-off NovaCopper, was on hand to listen to the discussion. Van Nieuwenhuyse led the team that developed the now defunct Rock Creek gold mine in Nome.

The Ambler Mining District access road is being pursued by the state, but a major driver is the mining industry. No large-scale mine could become reality without road access to the Ambler Mining District.

The most advanced project is NovaCopper's Arctic mine prospect. Van Nieuwenhuyse said NovaCopper is at the beginning of a 10-year process to develop the Arctic mine and maybe later the Bornite deposit. "We need more drilling and more technical studies to complete a feasibility study and that is about three or four years away," he told the Nome Nugget. The feasibility study, if the board gives the thumbs up on the project, would then trigger an EIS.

Why an EIS when it wasn't done for Rock Creek? "In case of Rock Creek, the Corps elected – because it had been a historically mined area – that an Environmental Assessment was sufficient to address the environmental impact issues." Van Nieuwenhuyse said. At the Upper Kobuk deposits, NovaCopper expects having to conduct an EIS because the region hasn't been mined

AIDEA expects the road EIS to take up to four years, that's when

NovaCopper roughly will be finished with its mine feasibility study. "Clearly, the project has to be economically viable in order for us to go forward," said Van Nieuwenhuyse. "The AIDEA board is also not going to build a road unless its known that we have a viable mining operation at the other end of it."

Asked how NovaCopper plans to build a mine in a remote location with many logistical challenges when NovaGold couldn't get the mine at Rock Creek in Nome to work, Van Nieuwenhuyse said the difference is in the grade of the ore. "We had a low grade deposit at Rock Creek, and unfortunately, as you know, as we were in the middle of building the mine, we were sued and had to put things on hold. That cost a lot of extra money," Van Nieuwenhuyse said. "When we were able to get back and start it, 2008 saw a worldwide financial crisis which limited the ability to raise capital so that was very bad timing. We needed an extra $50 or $60 million to complete the mine. The financial crisis forced us to shut the mine down, it forced us to make hard decisions."

He added that NovaGold's big project has always been the Donlin Creek prospect, which wasn't communicated to Nome stakeholders.

"We were forced to focus all our efforts on advancing that project over and above advancing Rock Creek," Van Nieuwenhuyse said. The infrastructure for Rock Creek is still there, he argued, and once gold prices recover, it has future potential.

"We came to a good agreement with Bering Straits Native Corporation to acquire the mine site and equipment and plant site as well as other significant lands around the area," van Nieuwenhuyse stated. "We think that was the right thing to do, we thought it was a good arrangement for ourselves and a good arrangement for BSNC."

Caribou

One person sitting on the sidelines, also not invited, was ADF&G biologist Jim Dau. As a managing biologist, Dau is interested in finding out how the road will affect caribou in terms of movement and distribution. He also wants to know how it affects hunters and subsistence users, commercial operators and recreational hunters.

Dau spoke to the Nome Nugget about the complexity of caribou science. "I look way beyond the construction phase and what the effects are, and even beyond that," he said. "It's a road to at least one mine. Is this just the first road? Is there going to be an expanding network of roads from beyond this road? We don't know. Nobody is talking about that

PAYING ATTENTION— Ambler Mayor Conrad Douglas reminded those present that stakeholders need to pay close attention to the details of the proposed road and the proposed mine. "I fear the future of mining," he said. "We can't ignore the demand for mining minerals, but what we can to is to be participants. There is a process. The positive thing is that we all participate in the process."

Road to Ambler

yet, because I don't think anybody knows. But that's what where my mind goes in terms of impact, it's not just this road."

Dau said that while the process right now only focuses on the possibility of a road to Ambler Mining District, cumulative impacts need to be taken into account if impacts on caribou are to be studied properly. "Cumulative impacts mean that you can't afford to focus on just one new development project at time, you need to look at the big picture. We just talked about looking at long term, but you need to look at the big picture spatially, too. So the discussion about the road shouldn't be about this road only, it should be about this road in combination with the effects from the Red Dog road and the effects to the proposed road to Umiat.

"The governor's been real clear that he would like to develop gas in the northern foot hills of the Delongs, there are air port expansions, there is expansion of Red Dog, there are all these types of development that are on people's radar. Not all of them will be built, but in terms of impact assessments, it sort of forces people to look at all those things together. Ultimately that's what the caribou react to, its not just one thing at a time, but to everything," Dau reasoned.

The Western Arctic Caribou Herd is the main herd that the region is concerned with. It roams on the most intact range of any big caribou herd in North America.

Different opinions

When City of Ambler Mayor Conrad Douglas asked who decides whether or not the road will be built, the answer was that AIDEA will go through its vigorous process, then there is the federal EIS process. AIDEA needs approval of the involved boroughs and needs to satisfy its own due diligence and deal structuring. The road corridor spans two ANCSA regions and tracts of unorganized lands. Mark Davis, deputy director for AIDEA's infrastructure development, said by statue, the Governor would have to establish a regional advisory council.

Bettles Mayor Gary Hanchett didn't mince words when he voiced clear opposition to the road. "Bettles and Evansville are the only villages going to be destroyed by the road," he said. "Bettles has passed a resolution against the road, one of the reasons being is subsistence. How can you justify the destruction in one part of the land to enhance another part? It's like we don't exist. That's going to be the end of our way of life."

Bettles' neighboring community Evansville also expressed concern with the road because a public right of way from the proposed road corridor leads right to their village. The proposed road corridor passes through the private property of Evansville Inc.

Further west, John Gaedeke's family owns a wilderness lodge where he grew up. The proposed road would run within eight miles of the lodge.

Gaedeke also was not invited to the meeting, but showed up anyway. He said he formed a network opposing the road to provide a forum for those who don't agree with the proposal. "I created the Brooks Range Council which helps to bring the 'no' message forward," Gaedeke said. "I bring the message that people are opposed to the road forward. The state's job is to develop so it's not going to put the 'no' option on the table. There are a lot of people who are not a part of a village or a town and those are trappers, miners and villagers. They want to be part of an information network and want to hear the other side of it."

He added that most cannot to go to any of those meetings. "My hope is that by forming the network that somebody will be at the meeting representing the 'no' option and report back"

Gaedeke said his family lodge started 40 years ago. The business and the lifestyle they have chosen are promoting this wilderness. "I have clients who come to see an Alaska that has no roads and wide open country, caribou that can pass through an area without jumping fences and dodging trucks," he said. "My folks moved 200 miles north of Fairbanks to be in the middle of nowhere and to be in this wilderness without roads. To see that change would be devastating. I have nightmares about it."

Perspectives

After agency presentations were done, the tone became contemplative as invited participants sat in a circle and told their individual stories, their fears and hopes. Some, like Northwest Arctic Borough assemblyman Larry Westlake spoke of his dual heritage of being the son of a white miner and an Eskimo mother. "We all knew that our survival life of our ancestors is coming to an end," Westlake said. "We need fishing nets, boats, snowmachines and motors and we need cash to buy them." He asked, if no development in the region occurs, where is the money going to come from? "We can't go back to where we started from," he said.

Virginia Commack of Ambler voiced a different opinion. She said, speaking in Inupiaq, that growing up she didn't know that they were poor. She felt rich because she was loved and because she was taught by her elders the art of relationship building. This, she said, would come in handy now that they have to listen and build relationships with their neighbors to the east and with the mining companies, also. But the driver of her decisions, she said, is to benefit future generations. "You were given the right to take care of things around you," she said. "You take that knowledge and you pass it on." She added that at this point it is more important to listen to each other's concerns. "We don't have to worry about money right now. It'll come to us in its own form and its own time."

After hours of contemplating the issue, the consensus was to take time to ponder the questions, to gather as much information as possible and to keep an open mind.

Fred Bifeld from Huslia said in a heartfelt speech that it is hard to make the decisions this generation is faced with. "I wish we could just continue to be subsistence people, people of the land," he said. "But it's not like that. We have to take care of our game and fish, that's the core of our life. But in this modern era, we have to deal with what's coming at us, to our daily life. It's remiss for us to think that we are the only ones facing this. Over the course of humanity, they had to make decisions like this, all over the world," Bifeld said

Reggie Joule summarized the conversation and reminded the gathering of their power. "I think we are moving into a position of strength regardless if we're for or against it," he said. "The EIS is not here yet.

Who knows when they start that process, but we gotta make sure that people from our area are at the table and that we know what's going on in conversations they are having."

Dear Editor:

Vote Yes to Repeal SB 21

History reveals why the multi-national oil corporations don't merit the kind of trust extended to them by SB21. It legally requires nothing in increased throughput of oil or revenues to Alaska. I will be voting Yes to repeal SB 21 on Aug. 19

Let's review just a portion of the Major Producers' tainted history. There are some ethical questions at the core.

Governor Parnell pushed passage of SB21 in the Senate, winning by one vote, with two Senators voting despite ethics conflicts concerning their employment with Conoco Philips. Pete Kelly voiced the objection to the ethics rules, which would have caused the two Conoco Senators to abstain from voting.

In 2013 those supporting SB21 promised increased oil throughput of 1,000,000 bbls/day; fallacies which are no longer uttered. They lied to win.

SB21 represents unwarranted trust in contractual relationships with the Major Producers. Examples include:

- SB21 creates barriers for Independent producers attempting operations on the Slope, reinforcing the Big 3's quasi-monopoly they've enjoyed for decades. North Slope competition, which was in place under ACES, benefits Alaska, but not the Big 3.
- not the Big 3.
   In the '70s and '80s there was the Amerada Hess case; the Producers were caught under-valuing our oil, cheating us of our share of its value. It took decades to resolve that theft.
- Later came the TAPS settlement; the Big 3 had routinely overcharged independent operators for transporting their oil through the pipeline. Substantial time and money was spent to force the Producers toward honesty... again.
- Following those cases were regulatory hearings wherein BP was found to have taken deductions multiple times. Later they'd be found to have inflated renovation costs, and attempting to drive up tariffs again.
- Then came the Doyon case; the pouring of over 500 barrels of waste down dry wells on the North Slope. Those convicted named Randy Ruedrich as their instructor in that crime. BP was fined for their hesitation in reporting.
- During the corruption investigations, then-CEO Jim Bowles (Conoco) sat in a Baranof Hotel room, being recorded by the FBI, as Bill Allen of VECO discussed the scheme to rig legislation, linking the Big 3 to VECO's legislative bribery scheme involving a tax structure nearly identical to the tax structure within SB21, and resulting in State legislators being sentenced to prison.
- Since 2006, the Producers have appealed the TAPS property evaluations and assessments every year, losing every appeal. The property owners in affected communities, including Fairbanks, have footed the bill for legal representation to battle Alyeska's bogus claims. The courts have annually ruled in favor of significantly higher evaluations than those sought by Alyeska (and the Parnell Administration).

During petitioning for ballot status for the referendum, the Big 3 routinely claimed to be paying 35 percent in Federal Corporate withholding taxes. The federal GAO published research indicating the greatest they paid was 11percent, and as little as 0 percent.

Econ 1 presented data that claimed North Dakota is more profitable for the Producers, but managed to omit fees paid to property owners there, as well as transport costs. That fallacy was set straight when Senator Stedman, R-Sitka, presented his data to the Senate Finance Committee, including those numbers omitted by Econ 1. Comparing North Dakota's system to SB21, using Alaska's FY2015 throughput forecast, North Dakota would receive approximately $1.45

Billion dollars more than Alaska.

BP now tells us they maintain over 80 percent Alaska-hire. They leave out the fact that most labor on the Slope is contracted; the rate of Outside hire there ranges from 50 percent to 70 percent, whether under ACES or under SB21.

Conoco, Exxon & BP, through 'No on 1,' flood our televisions and radios with $12 million in advertising, trying to convince Alaskan voters it benefits us to relinquish control of our hydrocarbon resources. Conoco and BP tell us they're Alaska's Oil Company, but their $millions in checks for ads are signed in Texas, LA, and London.

Then there's the suspect numbers used to arrive at Scott Goldsmith's conclusions in a 'study' Northrim paid $100,000 for; cherry-picking at its finest.

The history of these companies in Alaska emphasizes why control over our resources should remain in the hands of Alaskans, not the multi-national corporations. It is OUR oil and the revenue should remain here, not be exported to Texas, LA or London.

That's why I'll be voting 'Yes!' on Proposition 1 on August 19. It's OUR oil and we deserve better! Dirk R. Nelson

Details continue to emerge on Rep. Young's ethics violations

Don Young and his fancy French rain boots embarrass Alaskans

ANCHORAGE: After the House Ethics Committee released their findings on Don Young's ethics violations on Friday, details are now available for public view (here is the report and the detailed gift list). After 40 years in Congress, Rep. Young is still pleading ignorance that accepting air travel, lodging and meals, golf outings, car rentals, and a pair of fancy French rain boots is illegal.

Congressional candidate Forrest Dunbar questioned Don's oversight, "How is it that after 41 years Don doesn't understand that taking gifts over the limit is not allowed, let alone a pair of fancy French boots? Don thinks he is entitled to this seat, but he is not. That seat belongs to Alaska."

The majority of the gifts in question came from out-ofstate sources, including the lobbying firm Blank Rome and the Associated General Contractors of Texas. Also of note, Young took illicit gifts from Kellogg Brown & Root in 2006, during the height of the Iraq War. KBR famously overcharged the U.S. military by tens of millions dollars before and during the war effort.

One of the more flamboyant gifts Young accepted was a pair of $434 dollar French designer Le Chameau boots, given to him by Duncan Smith, the president of a DC lobbying firm.

Because of his repeat ethics violations with out-ofstate lobbyist friends, Young has been permanently stripped of his ability to chair full committees, and lost the formal power that traditionally comes with long seniority. Young passed four bills out of the House of Representatives last term, down from a height of twenty-six before his ethics violations began to hit the press.

"Everyone knows DC is dirty, and we need campaign finance reform," continued Dunbar, "What's remarkable is that even in that dirty system, Don Young managed to stand out and violate the ethics rules. That's why he has been stripped of his power and influence. The Alaska that I grew up in rewards those that work hard and play by the rules. I wear the same XtraTufs I did when commercial fishing in high school and would not be afraid or embarrassed to do so in Washington. I wouldn't accept a pair of fancy French rain boots. Frankly, I had never even heard of those things until the Ethics Committee revealed that Don Young took them."

In response to Don Young's ethics violation, Dunbar also released a 5-point Contract with Alaska.

Father and son team continue dentistry practice

By Diana Haecker

Dr. Daniel Stang, DDS considers himself a lucky man.

Just recently, the long awaited moment came when his new partner joined him at Nome Dental Offices. The dental practice, which operated at half-steam since Stang's longtime partner Ray Lang, DDS, retired, is now running again at full capacity.

As an added bonus, Stang's new sidekick is not just a talented dentist, but also his son Edward Stang, DDS. With the long-term plan in mind to get an education outside and return, Edward left Nome as a teenager to attend school in Milwaukee. At age 24, he was the youngest to graduate from Creighton dental school in Omaha, Nebraska. After 10 years of planning for this moment, he recently made his one-way trip back to Nome to work full time next to his dad at Nome Dental.

"I will work with Edward and eventually I'll start to slow down a little bit," said elder Dr. Stang, who dreams of less work and more play at his camp in Council. But for now the dental clinic is ramping up their business again, offering a full range of services

The elder Dr. Stang has practiced dentistry for 44 years in Nome and western Alaskan communities. Daniel Stang remembered arriving in Nome on July 1, 1971 from Wisconsin. He was working for the Public Health Service and spent much time flying to the surrounding villages. "I didn't know anything about Alaska but knew that I wanted to come here," said Stang. "When I arrived I was shocked for several months that there were no trees here at all." It didn't take long for Stang to adjust and to fall in love with the region, the abundance of game and the hunting and fishing opportunities this region offered.

Stang also had many adventures as a traveling dentist. He remembers loading up a small plane with a dental chair, a compressor to run the instruments and portable lights to the villages, flying with JD Walsh and dental assistant Strum Dickson. During one particularly dramatic whiteout storm near Hooper Bay, the small airplane crashed and was totaled, but Stang and Dickson and their pilot remained unharmed. "We just didn't see the ground coming," remembered Stang. They lived to tell and didn't even have to walk to look for help. By coincidence, a snowmachiner happened to come by their crash site, loaded their dental gear into the sled and gave them a ride to the village.

Stang remembered that they went about their scheduled appointments and not until the evening did the shock of their near-death experience set in and their knees began shaking.

Stang laughed heartily at the recollection of this instant. Also, he said, back then improvising was the secret to getting things done.

'Sometimes we taped the operating lights on a tripod to the ceiling with duct tape," remembered elder Stang laughing. Back then the dentist wore no protective gloves either.

Comparing modern dentistry to back-in-the-days methods, both elder and young Stang agree that the methods and techniques of treatment have stayed the same - they still drill and fill - but the instruments and medications have improved.

Around 1975, Dr. Stang teamed up with Dr. Ray Lang, who was a private practitioner, and operated out of the basement of the old hospital. In 1977, they build the Nome Professional Building on Bering Street, which still houses the Nome Dental offices. Dr. Lang and Dr. Stang ran the dentistry practice together until Ray Lang retired in 2007. Dr. Lang retired at that time from practicing dentistry in Nome. He maintained his Oregon and Alaska license for a few years in Oregon. "Now I am retired completely and maintain a herd of housedogs and grandchildren!" he wrote in an email correspondence with the Nome Nugget.

From 2007 on, Dr. Stang was on his own. "It was hard to be without a partner," said the elder Stang.

In 1989, Edward was born. He was raised in Nome and attended Nome-Beltz Jr./Sr. High School until, at the young age of 14, he left the Gold Rush City to live with his uncle in Milwaukee. Edward went on to attend pharmacy school at Drake University in Des Moine, Iowa. After three semesters, he decided to switch over to dentistry and applied to five different schools. He chose Creighton University and is glad that his studies took him there because of the school's emphasis on general dentistry rather than specialized skills. "That way, I have a whole lot more experience in all kinds of things," young Stang said. "Being a family dentist, you have to be sort of a jack-of-all-trades."

Stang said the first year of the four-year study schedule is mostly theoretical. In the second year, the students begin practicing on mannequins and one another. After that, they begin to see patients who come to the university and are brave enough to take a seat in the large operating room, filled with 150 dental chairs.

Stang became top of his class, graduated as the youngest student and also earned the Dr. Ridder Operative Award for Excellence from the operative department - teaching restorative dentistry.

At a time when Alaskan graduates stay in larger cities or don't return to Alaska at all, Edward Stang had no doubt in his mind that he would come back to Nome. "Sure, I can make more money in the Lower 48, but the hunting and fishing there doesn't compare at all to what Nome offers," Edward Stang said. "Down there, there are people just everywhere and there is not enough

Also, it didn't hurt that dad operates an established practice. "Very few of my class mates have that opportunity," young Stang said.

Alone, elder Dr. Stang said, he had no time to do more involved procedures such as root canals, and he had to cut down on patient numbers.

With two dentists at the dental offices again, the Stangs can take on more patients and tackle more involved procedures. They have hired a second assistant and are looking for a dental hygienist to work for them full-time.

While the younger Dr. Stang is just starting out in his career, Daniel Stang will be working alongside his son, but trying to spend more and more time out at Council to enjoy hunting and fishing.

BIRDS - Seagulls feast on capelin fish in front of Nome. Capeline spend most of their lives offshore, moving inshore only to spawn. Capelin are a high energy food source and play a key role in marine food webs, transferring energy to higher level predators such as large fishes, marine mammals and birds.

The U.S. Commerce Department last week appointed Nome's Simon Kinneen to the North Pacific Fishery Management Council.

Simon Kinneen is one of 22 people appointed to the eight regional fishery management councils that partner with NOAA's Fisheries Service to manage ocean fish stocks.

The North Pacific Council includes members from Alaska and Washington. Simon Kinneen fills an obligatory seat for Alaska. Kinneen works for Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation. For the last 14 years Kinneen has served NSEDC in various roles, including Norton Sound fisheries research and development director, CDQ manager, chief operating officer and most recently, vice president and quota acquisition manager. He has served on the NPFMC Advisory Panel and Non-Target Species Committee, Bering Sea Fisheries Advisory Board, Advisory Panel to the North Pacific Research Board, Marine Conservation Alliance, and various other boards relating to state and federal fisheries. Kinneen currently is NSEDC's representative to the Western Alaska Community Development Association. He was supported by the outgoing member Eric Olson, who chaired the NPMF council.

The new and reappointed council members begin their three-year terms on August 11. The US Secretary of Commerce selects members from nominations submitted by the governors of fishing states, territories and tribal governments.

The councils were established by the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act to prepare fishery management plans for marine fish stocks in their re-

NOAA's Fisheries Service works with the councils as plans are developed. It then reviews, approves, and implements the fishery management plans. Council members represent commercial and recreational fishing industries, environmental organizations and academia.

Council members are appointed to both obligatory (state-specific) and at-large (regional) seats. Council members serve a three-year term and can be reappointed to serve three consecutive terms.

THIS REPORT SHOWS OUR WATER QUALITY AND WHAT IT MEANS.

Nome Joint Utility System routinely monitors for constituents in your drinking water according to Federal and State laws. This table shows the results of our monitoring for the period January 1 to December 31, 2013. As water travels over the land or underground, it can pick up substances or contaminants such as microbes, inorganic and organic chemicals, and radioactive substances. All drinking water, including bottled drinking water, may be reasonably expected to contain at least small amounts of some constituents. It is important to remember that the presence of these constituents rankings are assigned based on the susceptibility of the drinking water source, recent sampling results and the presence of potential contaminant sources. — they of not necessarily indicate these contaminants will reach you source of what. None Water System has received the following valuerability rankings: "flow" and the aquifier received a susceptibility raing of "medium". Combining these sources produces a natural susceptibility raing of "medium". Combining these sources produces a natural susceptibility of ring" for the sources. In addition, this water system has received a vulnerability rating of "medium" of the sources, medium" for intratestivities, "medium for source sources, indicating for intratestivities, "medium for source vulner assessments are available at ADEC's Dirinking Water Protection Program, 555 Cordova St, Anchorage, AK, or the Alaska Resources Library and Information Services, 3150 C St, Anchorage, AK. ### HEALTH EFFECTS:

SOURCE WATER ASSESSMENT AND ITS AVAILABILITY

Some people may be more vulnerable to contaminants in drinking water than the general population. Immuno-compromised persons such as persons with cancer undergoing chemotherapy, persons who have undergone organ transplants, people with HIVA/IDS or other immune system disorders, some elderly, and inflants can be particularly at risk from infections. These people should seek advice about drinking water from their health care providers. EPA/CDC guidelines on appropriate means to lessen the risk of infection by cryptosporidium and other microbiological contaminants are variable from the EPA Salfo Drinking Water Hotinie (800-424-791). The Hotiline can also provide more information about contaminants and potential

Additional Information for Lead for present, eleveral levels of lead can cause serious health problems, especially for pregnant women and young children. Lead in drinking water is primarily from materials and components associated with service lines and home plumbing. NUIS is responsible for providing high quality drinking water, but cannot control the variety of materials used in plumbing components. When your water has been sitting for several hours, you can milimize the potential for lead exposure by flushing your tap for 30 seconds to 2 minutes before using water for drinking or cooking. If you are concerned about lead in your water, you may wish to have your water tested, information on lead in drinking water, lesting methods, and steps you can take to minimize exposure is available from the Safe Drinking Water Hotline or at http://www.epa.gov/safewaterlead.

As a public water system, NJUS is required to provide ongoing routine reports to the Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation on water system operations, monitoring and water quality testing. ### Big changes planned for Anvil City Square By Chip Leeper place the Richard Foster building at

Director of Parks and Recreation City of Nome

During the debate last fall over the potential placement of the new Richard Foster Building within the northeastern parameters of Anvil City Square (commonly referred to as Old St. Joe's), numerous members of the public opposed the site on the grounds that it was Nome's only real

Green space defined by Dictionary.com is "a plot of undeveloped land separating or surrounding areas of intensive residential or industrial use that is maintained for recreation enjoyment." Sub-arctic Nome has a dearth of naturally occurring grass, exacerbating the effects of losing any existing green space. The thought of losing this precious space was decried to be too much for local citizens to bear.

The City of Nome Department of Parks and Recreation, whose mission is to promote active and healthy outdoor activities, wholeheartedly agrees, and was spurred on by the public's comments. Nome Common Council followed suit. They rescinded their earlier decision to the Anvil City Square and provided funding in the 2014 Fiscal Year budget to spruce up the park so that it will again live up to its unofficial title of "crown jewel of Nome."

To give the public what they deserve, the Department of Parks and Recreation has some exciting plans for the space. In an effort to alleviate confusion once the overhaul begins, we would like the opportunity to inform the local population of what is going to take place.

The project will be broken into two main phases - a complete overhaul of the existing dead, brown grass with a lush new matted lawn and an expansion of the playground space replete with bright, shiny new equipment for youth to enjoy.

Prior to the installation of the new lawn, the existing grass will be tilled under and new fill will be added. Currently, soil samples are being processed at a laboratory; after the results are known, we will consult with the State of Alaska Natural Resources Alaska Plants Materials Center to create a fertile soil conducive to our needs.

It is currently assumed that the existing soil cannot support a lawn due to severe compaction from repeated foot traffic and a significant lack of nutrients attributable to leaching and overall poor quality of soil due to our climate.

To get the grass seed to germinate and grow, we will need to fence off the entire area around Anvil City Square for a whole year. Yes, it will look unsightly. It will be a hassle to stay off the property. However, the payoff for a long-term sustainable green space comes with necessary short-term drawbacks. The new playground will be roughly double in size and feature 12 new elements (currently there are only 2) designed specifically for aged 2-12-year-old kids. It will be Nome's best playground— one that will be a source of enjoyment and civic pride for years to come. The playground will be fenced in nd have benches and bike racks so that parents can sit and watch their children play in a safe environment. There will also be more trash receptacles placed around the park so that litter can be thrown away and the park will stay beautiful once the public is able to use it.

PLAYGROUND - The City of Nome Department of Parks and Recreation plans to build the pictured playground at Anvil City Square next to Old St. Joe's.

ADF&G fish report for Norton Sound and Kotzebue

By Jim Menard, ADF&G

CRAB:

Both the open access and CDQ fishery opened at noon, Wednesday, June 25. The GHL is 382,800 pounds with 28,710 pounds reserved for the CDQ fishery. To date 32 permit holders have registered for the open access fishery.

SALMON:

Norton Sound

The upcoming 4th of July weekend will have fireworks both in the air and in the water and all subdistricts of the Norton Sound District could have commercial fishing periods during the first week of July.

Regulations allow for commercial fishing periods in Subdistricts 5 (Shaktoolik) and 6 (Unalakleet) to begin July 1 for salmon species other than king salmon. The department will continue with restricted mesh size gillnet subsistence openings in addition to limiting gillnet mesh size in the commercial fishing periods to further protect king salmon.

The department appreciates the sacrifice fishermen have made and their continued support and conservation efforts. The sustainability of these fisheries depends on our combined efforts.

Unalakleet Subdistrict

Sport Fishing: The retention of king salmon is prohibited and the use of bait is banned until August 15 or subsequent emergency order in the Unalakleet River drainage. Any king salmon incidentally hooked must be immediately released in the water.

Subsistence salmon beach seining is open in all fresh waters from 6 pm. Saturday, June 28 until 6 p.m. Sunday, June 29. All king salmon captured must be immediately released in the water unharmed.

North River Tower - Camp J.B. -Escapement goals: King 1,200-2,600; Chum-No goal established; Pink 25,000; Silver 550-1,100 (aerial survey goal) - cooperative project; NSEDC with assistance from Fish & Game.

Counts started on June 14 with the first salmon spotted on June 21. Cumulative counts through June 26 were 0 kings, 66 chums and 258 pinks. Still early as historically we're at the 1% point of king passage.

Unalakleet River Floating Weir -No weir escapement goals yet established – cooperative project; Fish & Game, Native Village of Unalakleet, United States BLM and NSEDC. Major funding provided by U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service - Office of Subsistence Management.

High water has delayed the installation of the weir, but the weir is expected to be fish tight tonight.

Shaktoolik Subdistrict

Sport Fishing: The retention of king salmon is prohibited and the use of bait is banned until August 15 or subsequent emergency order in the Shaktoolik River drainage. Any king salmon incidentally hooked must be immediately released in the water.

Shaktoolik Sonar/Tower - No escapement goals yet established - cooperative project; NSEDC with assistance from Fish & Game.

Cumulative counts through June 26 were 87 kings, 1,416 chums and 876 pinks.

Norton Bay Subdistrict

Sport Fishing: The retention of king salmon is prohibited until August 15 or subsequent emergency order. Any king salmon incidentally hooked must be immediately released in the water.

The Koyuk River is open to subsistence salmon gillnet fishing 24 hours a day/7 days a week.

A 24-hour pink salmon directed commercial fishing period was from 6 p.m. Saturday, June 28 until 6 p.m. Sunday, June 29. Permit holders are limited to 150 fathoms of gillnet and a mesh size of 4.5 inches of less.

The 24-hour chum salmon directed commercial fishing period that ended at 6 p.m. June 26 had a catch of 40 kings, 2,052 chums and 2,557 pinks by 6 permit holders. Kings were not purchased by the buyer and were retained for personal use. Both the chum and pink catch were above average for this date.

Inglutalik River Tower - No escapement goals established - A cooperative project between NSEDC and Fish & Game.

The crew starting counting on June 20. Cumulative counts through June 26 were 289 kings, 3,3037 chums, and 1,791 pinks. Counts for all species by this date are the highest in the 4-year project history.

Elim Subdistrict

Sport Fishing: The retention of king salmon is prohibited until August 15 or subsequent emergency order. Any king salmon incidentally hooked must be immediately released in the water.

Subsistence fishing: The retention of king salmon is prohibited until August 15 or subsequent emergency order. Any king salmon incidentally hooked must be immediately released in the water.

A 24-hour pink salmon directed commercial fishing period was from 6 p.m. Saturday, June 28 until 6 p.m. Sunday, June 29. Permit holders are limited to 150 fathoms of gillnet and a mesh size of 4.5 inches of less.

Kings were not purchased by the buyer and were retained for personal use. Both the chum and pink catch were above average for this date.

Kwiniuk River Tower – Camp Joel - Escapement goals: King 300-550; Chum 11,500 - 23,000; Pink 8,400; Silver 650-1,300 (aerial survey goal). Fish & Game project with assistance from NSEDC.

Cumulative counts through June 27 are 102 kings, 11,520 chums and 10,212 pinks. Nearly 5,000 chums passed yesterday. Through this date the king count is the best in over 10 years and the chum count is the best in the 50-year project history.

Golovin Subdistrict

Sport Fishing: The retention of king salmon is prohibited until August 15 or subsequent emergency order. Any king salmon incidentally hooked must be immediately released in the water.

Subsistence fishing: The retention of king salmon is prohibited until August 15 or subsequent emergency order. Any king salmon incidentally hooked must be immediately released in the water.

A 24-hour pink salmon directed commercial fishing period was be from 6 p.m. Saturday, June 28 until 6 p.m. Sunday, June 29. Permit holders are limited to 150 fathoms of gillnet and a mesh size of 4.5 inches of

The 24-hour chum salmon directed commercial fishing period that ended at 6 p.m. June 26 had a catch of 2 kings, 3 reds, 1,178 chums and 113 pinks by 7 permit holders. Kings were not purchased by the buyer and were retained for personal use along with the reds. Both the chum and pink catch were above average for this date.

At this time the department is managing the Golovin Subdistrict chum salmon fishery based on the Kwiniuk River tower escapement counts. Comparing Niukluk River tower chum salmon counts (1995-2012) with Kwiniuk River tower chum salmon counts of the same year there has been agreement between both rivers achieving or not achieving their respective escapement goals in 16 of 18 years. The department will also evaluate catch per unit of effort (CPUE) in the commercial fishery for additional fishing time. Pink salmon escapement had been reached every year that the Niukluk River tower was operational and is ensured again this year.

Fish River Tower - No escapement goals established - cooperative project; NSEDC with assistance from Fish & Game.

The crew has been counting since June 18. Cumulative counts through June 27 were 156 kings, 4,260 chums and 2,829 pinks.

State, FDA finds Alaska's Seafood safe from Fukushima radiation

By Diana Haecker

Reacting to public concerns of radiation in seafood due to continued leaking of radioactive materials from the Fukushima Dai-Ichi nuclear plant in Japan, the Alaska departments of Environmental Conservation and Health and Social Services with the federal U.S. Food and Drug Administration conducted radiation testing of Alaska-caught seafood.

According to a press release from the state, the results confirm that consumption of seafood from the North Pacific and Alaska waters poses no radiation related health con-

The testing found no detections of the Fukushima-related radioisotopes Iodine-131, Cesium-134 or Cesium-137. There was some detection of background levels, remnants from tests done during the Cold War when atmospheric nuclear testing was

The results indicate no appreciable risk from any tested radionuclide in these fish.

The FDA continues to monitor radiation in domestic and imported foods. It determined that there have been no levels of Fukushima radiation in those foods that would pose a public health concern. According to state veterinarian Dr. Bob Gerlach, state workers collected samples of fish caught in three areas: The Aleutian Islands and Bering Sea; from the Gulf of Alaska and Southeast Alaska. Sample species were pollock, halibut and sablefish.

According to Dr. Gerlach, they took samples from 12 to 15 different fish fillets, averaging about 4 pounds per species. Testing will continue throughout the year, with species such as cod and salmon added to the list of sampled species.

DEC and DHSS developed a sampling plan and coordinated with the FDA to analyze several Alaska fish species known to migrate from the western Pacific Ocean and that are harvested by commercial, recreational and subsistence fishers.

We heard concerns from our neighbors, friends and other citizens throughout Alaska about the possible contamination of Alaska fish with the radiation releases from the Fukushima disaster," DEC Environmental Health director Elaine Busse Floyd said. "We did not expect to find any problems with Alaska seafood based on federal monitoring of domestic and imported foods. However, we felt that it was important to assist the FDA by developing a sampling plan and obtaining Alaska fish to be tested. The data reassures us and other Alaskans for whom seafood is such a critical part of life in Alaska."

For more detailed information on the analyses, see DEC's website http://dec.alaska.gov/eh/Radiation/in dex.html and DHSS's website http://www.epi.hss.state.ak.us/eh/radiation/default.htm.

Where do you get your salt?

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Americans acquire most of their salt from ten common food categories according to the Center for Disease Control and Prevention.

Salt is essential for life. Every cell in the human body uses sodium (salt) to function properly. The proper amount of salt is healthy. Too much salt can be a problem. Excess salt intake has been associated with hypertension, stroke, osteoporosis, kidney stones, and stomach cancer.

For this reason, the American Heart Association recommends a daily limit of 2300 mg of sodium for healthy young adults, roughly one teaspoon of table salt, and a lower goal, 1500 mg, about 3/4 teaspoon of salt, for older patients or those with high blood pressure, heart disease, or risk » factors for stroke. Most Americans consume over 3600 mg of sodium daily; well over the recommended amounts.

The source of this extra salt may be surprising. The saltshaker is not usually the culprit. According to the CDC, the most common sources of extra sodium are: bread and rolls; sandwich meats; pizza; processed chicken; soups; hamburgers; pasta dishes; and meatloaf. Savory snacks, like potato chips, were last on the list.

There is an ongoing medical controversy regarding the health effects of this excess dietary salt.

Authors of a study in the American Journal of Hypertension suggested that restricting dietary salt makes no difference in a person's overall heart health. After reviewing multiple studies on the effects of low-salt diets, the researchers concluded, "We found no strong evidence that salt reduction reduced all-cause mortality or cardiovascular morbidity in normotensives or hypertensives.'

Preventive-medicine experts cry foul in a response, "The totality of evidence, including epidemiological studies, animal studies, randomized trials, and now outcome studies all show the substantial benefits in reducing the average intake of salt."

About half of the studies to date show a cardiovascular benefit to reducing salt in the diet. The other half demonstrates no effect or, worse, a harmful effect to restricting dietary salt.

The controversy is not new. The World Health Organization has named salt reduction as a priority in treating non-communicable diseases worldwide. However, surveys from around the world show that, despite wide variations in diet and culture, most people consume the same amount of salt daily. This has led some researchers to hypothesize that humans have a hard-wired set point in the brain for salt intake. This would theoretically make it very hard to reduce overall salt intake

Furthermore, forced salt restriction may result in unintended consequences. Just as the "low-fat" diets of the 1980s caused people to eat more sugar, leading to obesity, people may consume larger portions of "low-salt" foods, and thereby more calories, in order to keep their sodium intake stable.

The key is balance. Dietary sodium is an essential part of the human diet. Added sodium, table salt, is rarely needed in a well-balanced healthy meal of vegetables, healthy meats, like fish, and healthy oils, like olive oil. We tend to add salt to otherwise unhealthy foods, like chips, fried foods, and red meats. In general, it is the food itself, not the salt content that is healthy or harmful.

ALASKA So, how can people balance their FAMILY daily intake of DOCTOR sodium? Here are a few ideas: First, read labels.

The CDC report shows that many common foods, like breads, canned soups, fried foods, and processed meats are very high in hidden sodium. Select foods with a lower amount of sodium per serving, and rinse salt-preserved and canned

Second, boost the amount of potassium in the diet to a healthy level. Foods rich in potassium are good for your heart and balance the effects of sodium. Potassium is best obtained from the diet. Foods rich in potassium include fruits, vegetables, whole grains, salmon, and beans. Potassium supplements can be dangerous and should only be taken under the direction of a physician. People with kidney disease should talk with a provider about the amount of daily potassium that is Third, make sure that foods you prepare pass the test of tears. That is, does the food taste saltier than tears? Interestingly, the concentration of sodium in human tears remains constant and roughly equals the concentration of sodium in the blood stream. Therefore, foods that taste less salty than tears are likely better for your heart. Consider using the lowest amount of salt necessary when preserving your own foods.

Finally, remember the colors of salt. Not all salt is white. Try to limit added salt in its other colors. like red salt in ketchup or salsa, yellow salts like mustard, and green salts like pickles or relish. And go easy on brown salts like soy sauce, gravy, and steak sauce.

As a general rule, adding salt in any color to food is a red flag that the food itself may be unhealthy and should be limited. Adjusting your diet to include more fruits, vegetables, herbs, and spices may be a challenge at first, but taste buds will easily accommodate a more balanced intake of salt, and your heart will appreciate your efforts to obtain sodium through a balance of these healthy foods.

Saying it Sincerely

By Rev. Ross Tozzi St. Joseph Catholic Church Member of the Nome Ministerial Association Faithful Citizenship

As politicians begin to cycle through Nome in anticipation of the fall elections, I am reminded that they often make a distinction between their private beliefs and their public policies. Running for President in 1960, Senator John F. Kennedy had to contend with people who thought he would be a puppet for the Pope and so he drew a clear line of distinction. "My religious beliefs are personal, they do not require me to, nor will I allow those beliefs to influence any of my public actions." No politician should be a puppet of the Pope, but every politician is accountable to God for their actions. If one's beliefs are based on the truth, then one is a poor steward of the truth if he claims there is one set of truths for private belief and a second set for public consumption.

Anyone running for office should bring their moral convictions into public life. This does not threaten democracy but enriches it. The separation of church and state does not require division between private belief and public action nor between moral principles and political choices. Being a faith filled public servant is not in contradiction with being an authentic politician.

What holds for the public figure holds for the private citizen as well. Each adult in the US has a right and an obligation to vote in local, state, and national elections. In the Catholic Tradition, being a believer means being an active citizen and helping to shape a world more respectful of the life and dignity of every person. One should carefully measure how a prospective public servant will reach out to the poor and the most vulnerable. Casting a vote in an election, is not a purely personal matter, but one which is inseparable from a persons responsibility to promote the common good, to care for the marginalized, and to give voice to those who have none.

Maternal grandparents are Sao Homekingkeo and Helen Homekingkeo of Koyuk. Paternal grandparents are the late Dean Sockpealuk and Julian and Irene Navarro of Golovin. Big sister Castyn,1, is a proud big sister.

Finalists

The University of Alaska Fairbanks has selected two finalists for the position of vice chancellor for rural, community and Native educa-

The finalists-Kathy Mayo and Evon Peter-were chosen from a field of 21 applicants in a national search to replace former Vice Chancellor Bernice Joseph, who retired in 2013 and passed away in January. Each finalist will have the opportunity to meet with members of the public and university community, including rural campuses, in the coming weeks.

Mayo's career in the private and public sector has spanned 25 years and included leadership positions in Native organizations, federal agencies and the oil and gas industry. Most recently, she served as chief administrative officer at Tanana Chiefs Conference.

Peter is a UAF alumnus who began his professional career in 1998 as the coordinator for the UAF Yukon Flats Center. Since then he has served in a variety of leadership positions in Native organizations and nonprofits. He is currently the CEO of Gwanzhii, LLC. a consulting firm that provides strategic planning, program development and other services for private and public organizations.

Peter and Mayo were chosen as finalists by a search committee comprised of university, Alaska and Native community leaders.
